Jail tapped for drug treatment program

■ State effort will solidify center's finances

The Henderson County Detention Center is one of three jails across the state that have been picked to house a new substance abuse program, which should help stabilize the local jail's finances, according to Judge-executive Hugh McCormick.

The program will guarantee the jail 50 female inmates, each of whom will go through six months of treatment, for which the state will pay the county for the housing and treatment of substance abuse problems, McCormick said during a press conference Monday. Exactly how much the county will receive has yet to be determined. "We haven't had a chance to put the pencil on that yet," he said.

"This is the governor's way of giving people another chance in getting rehab to the felons who are out there," said Col. Amy Martin of the jail staff. "A lot of the people who are recommended for parole nowadays... they're not released to the streets anymore. They have to go through substance abuse (treatment) before they're turned out into the community."

"Lots of people wanted it because everybody's inmate numbers are down," said McCormick, crediting Jailer Ron Herrington for landing the program. "This will help us in a very

Tax code, pension fund await lawmakers

■ New session convenes today

By Roger Alford
Associated Press

FRANKFORT — From reforming the state's tax code to shoring up the pension plan for government retirees, lawmakers will face some hefty issues after they convene a legislative session today.

The load could grow even bigger if lawmakers tack on the always-divisive issue of legislative redistricting, which they didn't get finished last year.

"It will be tough, but we can get it all done if we get in there and roll our sleeves up," said state Rep. Steven Rudy, R-Paducah. "I hope we can work together and find common ground. All of the issues that are out there, we all know we have to address them."

For the past year, lawmakers have been focused on the state's pension system, trying to find a way to deal with a $33 billion unfunded liability. A legislative task force that spent months studying the issue recommended pumping in more money without saying where the money would come from.

That task force rejected a proposal by the Pew Center on the States to issue bonds to cover the cost. But its members suggested two options that could help: repealing cost-of-living increases for retirees and moving state employees to a hybrid plan similar to a 401(k) that blends defined benefits with defined contributions.

Paducah's Doppler getting upgrade

■ 20-year-old system replaced

Associated Press

PADUCAH — The National Weather Service is upgrading the Doppler radar in Paducah with the aim of giving forecasters more accurate information with which to make forecasts.

The service is replacing the nearly 20-year-old radar at Barkley Regional Airport with dual-polarization radar. Meteorologist Dan Spaeth told The Paducah Sun (<http://bit.ly/TGnl7I>) the upgrade will allow meteorologist the ability to scan approaching weather systems to accurately determine the type of precipitation falling and amounts, in addition to allowing a clearer radar picture for impending emergency situations.

The new radar will allow forecasters to highlight areas where heavy downpours could lead to flash flooding; distinguish between rain versus hail, snow or sleet; improve scientists ability to determine non-meteorological returns like smoke; and even identify tornadoes within a 50-mile radius, said Rick Shanklin, warning coordination meteorologist at the weather service.

"It has enhanced capability to give us confirmation that there's a tornado on the ground," Shanklin said. "It is not a warning tool in the sense of giving advanced warnings for tornadoes, but after a tornado is occurring and

New curbside recycling schedule debuts

Gleaner staff

A new curbside recycling schedule began Monday in Henderson, which means recycling will occur the same days that city crews collect residential garbage.

However, recycle collections are still every other week by Allied Waste Services, which provides the service under a contract with the city.

The firm will run curbside collections five days a week, where before it collected every other week on Friday. Currently, the city is divided into five sections, where the city collects garbage every weekday. Allied Waste split each of those so there are 10 curbside recycling collection areas, each of which will see collections every other week.

For instance, this is A week so only those residents who live west of U.S. 41 and who normally have their garbage collected on Tuesdays will have their recyclable materials collected today.

Wednesday customers will be those who live north of Clay Street/Airline Road.

Thursday customers will be those who live north of Clay Street.

Friday customers will be those who live north of Sand Lane/Madison Street.

Next week the B-week customers on the opposite sides of the dividing streets will see their recyclables collected, beginning on Monday with those who live east of Green River Road.

Road tough for Obama's most recent nominations

By Julie Pace
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Digging in for a fight, President Barack Obama riled Senate Republicans and some Democrats, too, on Monday by nominating former senator and combat veteran Chuck Hagel to lead the Pentagon and anti-terrorism chief John Brennan as the next director of the Central Intelligence Agency.

Hagel and Brennan, in separate Senate confirmation hearings, will face sharp questions on a range of contentious issues, including U.S. policy about Israel and Iran, targeted drone attacks and harsh interrogation tactics. Of the two men, Hagel is expected to face a tougher path, though both are likely to be confirmed.

Hagel would be the first enlisted soldier and first

Kentucky mayors call for action to stem pension crisis

By Dylan Lovan
Associated Press

FRANKFORT — The mayors of Kentucky's two largest cities called on state lawmakers Monday to enact reforms that would help curb pension obligations that are crippling budgets in Lexington and Louisville.

Pension payments have ballooned over the past decade in Lexington and now account for 20 percent of the city's annual budget, Mayor Jim Gray said.

Lexington's obligations were just 6 percent of the budget in 2000. "Our pension costs have spiraled out of control," Gray said during a news conference in Frankfort with mayors and other local leaders. "It is the biggest financial issue our city faces."

Gray and Louisville Mayor Greg Fischer did not point to specific reforms they favor but urged lawmakers to take immediate action to prevent further unfunded costs. The cities are looking to state lawmakers for reform because the pension systems they pay into are guided by state laws.

Lexington's contributions to the city's police and fire pension funds have multiplied by six over the past ten years, to $41 million annually. And Lexington pays another $16 million annually to county employee pensions, a payment that has tripled over the decade.

The city has invested $136 million in bonds and $61 million in cash since 2009 to address the problem, but it hasn't been enough, Gray said.

Fischer said Louisville's pension obligations account for 15 percent of its general fund. Fischer said that figure was just 6 percent seven years ago.

A legislative task force formed to address the state's $33 billion unfunded pension liability has suggested repealing cost-of-living increases for retirees and moving state employees to a hybrid plan similar to a 401(k). The task force rejected a suggestion to invest in bonds to help pay for the shortfalls.

Republican Sen. Damon Thayer, who is co-chairman of the task force, said last month that a draft bill based on the task force's recommendations would be introduced in the Senate in the upcoming General Assembly. House Speaker Greg Stumbo, a Democrat, said in November that he believed a proposal for pension reform would pass in some form in the next legislative session.

Armed deputies roaming halls at state school

By Bruce Schreiner
Associated Press

MAYSVILLE, Ky. — Uniformed deputies, gun holsters at their sides, walked the hallways and stopped in classrooms Monday, eliciting smiles from teachers and high-fives from youngsters as they made security rounds that are becoming routine in this northeastern Kentucky community.

Mason County Sheriff Patrick Boggs has assigned his 11 full-time deputies to spend four hours each week at local public and private schools in the county 140 miles northeast of Louisville.

The initiative follows last month's massacre at a Connecticut elementary school that claimed the lives of 20 children and six school staff.

"I think it'll help just for a sense of security," Boggs said. "It's sad for the reasoning behind it. What happened in Connecticut could happen anywhere."

Boggs and Deputy Ryan Hull hugged and high-fived pupils at Straub Elementary in Maysville as school resumed following the holiday break. They answered questions — the most frequent being what was all that stuff on their duty belts. And they occasionally told kids their shoes were untied.

The sheriff wants his deputies to blend into the schools, becoming as much a fixture as reading and recess. He wants them to take time to read to classes, review school safety plans and become well acquainted with each school's layout in the event of an emergency.

As Hull stood at the side of a classroom, kindergarten teacher Lauren Doyle told her class that the officers are their friends.

"They're just making sure we're all safe," she said.

Parents and teachers praised the sheriff for his commitment to school safety.

"That's my only baby," Amy Combs said after helping her son, a kindergarten, take off his jacket in the hallway before he headed to class.

Combs said she'd favor installing metal detectors at the front doors near the office at Straub Elementary.

Those doors are the only ones unlocked during the school day. Another parent, Zac Horch, said he'd like to see a law enforcement officer posted at the school throughout the day.

Corps plans to restrict boat access

FRANKFORT — The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers will have two public meetings in January to inform the public about implementation of plans to restrict boat access near locks and dams on the Cumberland River and all of its tributaries. The first meeting will be Thursday from 6 to 8 p.m. at the Badgett Playhouse Theater at 1831 J.H. O'Bryan Ave. on Jan. 10 in Grand Rivers. The second meeting is in Somerset on Jan. 24 from 6 to 8 p.m. at Suite 300 at the Somerset Center for Rural Development at 2292 U.S. 27.

The new restrictions are based on a 1996 policy that prohibits water bound access to areas above and below dams. This will impact Martin's Fork, Laurel River, Barkley and Cumberland lakes.

Drain work planned along Kentucky 270

Gleaner staff

Kentucky 270 will be closed to through traffic north of Sturgis in Union County today and Wednesday, according to the Kentucky Transportation Cabinet.

A state road crew plans to close the roadway during daylight hours between U.S. 60 and Voss Road near the 6-mile marker for the replacement of two cross drains.

Kentucky 270 is expected to close about 8 a.m. following the school bus run each day, then reopen at 3:30 p.m. each day.

There will be no marked detour. Passenger vehicles can detour using Voss Road and Waller-Omer Road. Trucks should detour using appropriate state routes, according to the cabinet.

Melton to attend Farm Bureau meeting

Sebree farmer Eddie Melton, first vice president of the Kentucky Farm Bureau, is among the 26 voting delegates from the Bluegrass State who will be participating in the 94th annual meeting of the American Farm Bureau Federation next week in Nashville.

Delegates will vote on national policy issues during the business session of the meeting. Kentucky

Farm Bureau said its priority issues include the federal government's fiscal policy, a national farm bill, environmental regulations and farm labor reform.

Nearly 500 Kentuckians in all will attend the event, which will run from Sunday through Wednesday.

Nearly 8,000 attendees are expected from the 50 state Farm Bureaus and Puerto Rico at the event, which will take place at the Gaylord Opryland Resort & Convention Center.

Paul calls for cut in foreign aid

JERUSALEM — In his first visit to Israel, U.S. Sen. Rand Paul is calling for a gradual reduction of American foreign aid.

It's an unlikely place to deliver the message, since Israel is among the largest recipients of American assistance. But Paul said in a Monday meeting with reporters that the U.S. can't afford to keep sending money overseas, even to allies like Israel. He says it would be "harder to be a friend of Israel if we are out of money."

The Kentucky Republican, a longtime opponent of foreign aid, acknowledges he's expressing a "minority opinion" and doubts Congress will cut aid. He insists Washington should first cut aid to countries with strained ties to America, such as Pakistan and Egypt. Israel gets about $3 billion a year in military aid.

Red tape undercutting government’s ability to regulate imports

Remember those lead-tainted toys from China? Or the Florida condos built with thousands of sheets of foreign-produced dry wall allegedly made of toxic materials?

It turns out Uncle Sam has tied one arm behind his back when it comes to keeping Americans safe from dangerous imported goods.

The Government Accountability Office, the investigative arm of Congress, two weeks ago released a little-noticed report warning that the Consumer Product Safety Commission lacks the legal authority to enter into agreements with other governments to share information about dangerous products.

The U.S. consumer safety system is overwhelmed by the enormity of expanding global trade. The federal product safety commission had jurisdiction over $637 billion worth of imports in 2010 — a tidal wave of consumer goods that was nearly impossible to inspect or test.

Governments increasingly are cooperating with each other to share confidential — or “nonpublic” to use legal jargon — information about concerns they have about products that merit increased scrutiny. A free and frank discussion between nations about possible consumer safety threats is, frankly, wise.

The Consumer Product Safety Commission “could potentially obtain nonpublic information on product-related hazards from its foreign counterparts, but its legal restrictions on public disclosure of information have hampered its ability to establish information-sharing agreements,” the report to Congress concluded.

All three members of the safety commission, in a statement released by Chairwoman Inez Tenenbaum, agreed with the GAO’s findings and are asking for “more flexibility to exchange information with our counterparts in other countries through agreements that permit reciprocal terms on disclosure of information.”

We agree. The federal safety officials should not be legally hamstrung in sharing information about potentially dangerous products with foreign governments to keep American consumers safer from dangerous products.

Congress has a lot of common ground

Oh, my. House Speaker John Boehner, R-Ohio, says he is not going to talk to President Barack Obama one-on-one any more.

The speaker represents my hometown in Ohio, and I can tell you that pouting and refusing to talk to each other are not the way we do things. True, there may be shouting. Yes, there is often weird logic employed. Often there is no consensus. But we enjoy our face-to-face confrontations. It’s the American way!

Weren’t you stunned when you heard that Boehner refused to take four phone calls from New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie, a fellow Republican? Christie was furious that the speaker adjourned the 112th House without voting on money to help the suffering victims of Hurricane Sandy. Who would not want to be screamed at by the vociferous Christie?

The 113th Congress is not starting off well. Having just narrowly averted falling off the infamous “fiscal cliff,” in the next few months we will have even more showdowns. There is the battle over automatic spending cuts that will either be catastrophic or essential, depending on your point of view. There is the battle over whether the nation should pay the debts Congress already incurred. And then there is whether to shut down the entire government because something called a continuing resolution expires. It’s like “Days of Our Lives,” the never-ending soap opera.

There simply has to be common ground. But wait! There is. Here are some issues on which the deeply divided members of Congress certainly can agree: ■ Boehner has the worst job in Washington. People should stop criticizing him for crying in public. Or swearing at Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid of Nevada.

■ We have crossed a threshold. Washington used to believe that a billion here and a billion there and pretty soon you have real money. Today it’s a trillion here and a trillion there and pretty soon you have another year’s deficit.

■ Motherhood is not what it used to be. If you’re a politician, don’t talk about it.

■ Marriage is not what it used to be.

■ Apple pie can be dangerous if the apples have chemicals on them.

■ The National Rifle Association rules. Yesterday, it was “guns don’t kill people. People kill people.” Today: “The only thing that stops a bad guy with a gun is a good guy with a gun.” (Congress has a lot of guards with guns.)

Every member of Congress came to Washington to root out waste, fraud and abuse. While some people think one legislator’s waste is another legislator’s prime pork, there are some spending programs all can accept.

■ No regrets about closing the National Board of Tea Tasters a few years ago.

■ No one will ever again vote to spend money on anything called The Bridge to Nowhere.

■ Slashing $500 billion over 10 years from defense spending is a good idea except for R&D on weapons being built in any powerful senator’s backyard, ammunition for troop training and air conditioning in VIP visitor centers in Iraq and Afghanistan.

It’s a good thing the fiscal cliff was averted even though the deal included $480 million for Puerto Rican and Virgin Island rum production and $40 billion a year for racetrack owners for their tracks, bleachers and concession stands.

OK, so the 112th Congress was the paragon of least productive Congress in U.S. history in terms of bills passed, which pleases Tea Partiers no end but alarms everyone else.

Apparently, it was also the least popular Congress of all time. It also created the fiscal cliff out of thin air before it saved us from it.

The 113th has nowhere to go but up or it could be even worse. It’s kind of intriguing, really.

Is that Boehner over there in the corner crying?

three decades ago, the people of Latin America lived almost uniformly in various degrees of authoritarian regime. Today, Castro’s Cuba is literally the only remaining dictatorship in the Americas.

Even autocratic Hugo Chavez of Venezuela has to face the voters and has lost on occasion. Once tiny Costa Rica was a beacon of freedom south of our border. Now that light spreads throughout the Americas.

Likewise, reasonably honest and genuinely contested elections are spreading in Africa, Southeast Asia, the former Soviet Union and — on the local level — in China. In global context, the dramatic Arab Spring is the latest manifestation of a worldwide drive toward fair representative government.

■ Market economics is spreading, as alternative ways of producing wealth and prosperity are discredited. Deng Xiaoping’s declaration of “People’s Socialism” for China in 1992 has become a benchmark event not only for that nation but also for the Asia region as a whole, and beyond.

The Economic Cooperation Framework Agreement between mainland China and Taiwan is a historic result of the free market economic revolution. Virtually all economic barriers have come down. In consequence, Taiwan’s role as a source of investment, trade and expertise is vastly expanding.

This should reassure isolated leaders of North Korea, who launch missiles to distract from their disintegrating economy.

Hundreds of millions of people are living longer, better lives. In 1900, the average human life span in industrial nations was about 40 years. By 2000, that span had doubled.

■ These remarkable improvements proceed from a base of extraordinary growth in economic production. For extensive specific data on the improved human condition, from teeth to transport, consult the Libertarian Cato Institute volume “It’s Getting Better All The Time,” by Stephen Moore and Julian Simon.

■ The scientists at the mammoth laboratory CERN, located in a suburb of Geneva, reported in late 2011 that they apparently had recorded a neutrino beam traveling slightly faster than the speed of light. According to Albert Einstein’s universally accepted laws of modern physics, this is impossible.

However, by mid-2012 careful retesting and evaluation revealed they had erred in measurements. Albert Einstein still rules on this point absolutely, not relatively. Continuity remains important to progress.

Cancer death inches down

By Lauran Neergaard
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Death rates from cancer continue to inch down, researchers reported Monday.

Now the question is how to hold onto those gains and do even better, even as the population gets older and fatter, both risks for developing cancer.

“There has been clear progress,” said Dr. Otis Brawley of the American Cancer Society, which compiled the annual cancer report with government and cancer advocacy groups.

But bad diets, lack of physical activity and obesity together wield “incredible forces against this decline in mortality,” Brawley said. He warned that over the next decade, that trio could surpass tobacco as the leading cause of cancer in the U.S.

Cancer deaths began slowly dropping in the 1990s, and Monday’s report shows the trend holding. Among men, cancer death rates dropped by 1.8 percent a year between 2000 and 2009, and by 1.4 percent a year among women. The drops are thanks mostly to gains against some of the leading types — lung, colorectal, breast and prostate cancers — because of better treatment and screening.

The news isn’t all good. Deaths still are rising for certain cancer types including liver, pancreatic and, among men, melanoma the deadliest form of skin cancer.

Family members and victims line up to get into court for a preliminary hearing for Aurora theater shooting suspect James Holmes at the courthouse in Centennial, Colo., on Monday. Holmes is accused of killing 12 people and wounding dozens at a Colorado theater July 20.

CENTENNIAL, Colo. — The officers struggled to hold back the tears as they recalled the Colorado theater shooting: discovering a 6-year-old girl without a pulse, trying to keep a wounded man from jumping out of a moving police car to go back for his 7-year-old daughter, screaming at a gunshot victim not to die.

“After I saw what I saw in the theater — horrific — I didn’t want anyone else to die,” said Officer Justin Grizzle, who ferried the wounded to the hospital.

A bearded, disheveled James Holmes, the man accused of going on the deadly rampage, didn’t appear as show any emotion as Grizzle and the other officers testified Monday in a packed courtroom as survivors and families of those who died watched quietly.

“He’s heartless. He really is. He has no emotion. He has no feeling. I don’t know anybody can live that way,” said Sam Soudani afterward. His 23-year-old daughter survived after being hit by shrapnel from an explosive device at the theater.

On the first day of a hearing that will determine whether there’s enough evidence to put Holmes on trial, the testimony brought back the raw emotions from the days following the July 20 attack at the suburban Holmes didn’t show emotion at his hearing.

Denver theater that left 12 people dead and dozens wounded.

The massacre thrust the problems of gun violence and mental illness into the forefront before they receded in the ensuing months.

Now, just weeks after a shooting spree at a Newtown, Conn., elementary school left 20 children and six adults dead, prosecutors are laying out their case with the nation embroiled in a debate over gun violence and mental illness.

Any new details to emerge this week will come amid the discussion over an array of proposals, including tougher gun laws, better psychiatric care and the arming of teachers.

Church can’t withhold names in priest files

LOS ANGELES — The Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Los Angeles must release the names of church leaders and pedophile priests identified in thousands of pages of internal documents recounting sexual abuse allegations dating back decades, a judge ruled Monday.

The decision by Superior Court Judge Emilie Elias overturned much of a 2011 order by another judge that would have allowed the archdiocese to black out the names of church higher-ups. Victims, as well as The Associated Press and Los Angeles Times, argued for the names to be public.

Elias said she weighed the privacy rights of priests and others versus the public’s interest in learning details of the child abuse that prompted the archdiocese to agree to a record $660 million settlement with victims in 2007.

ANCHORAGE — A Royal Dutch Shell PLC drill vessel pulled from rocks off a remote Alaska island reached shelter Monday morning in a Kodiak Island bay.

The Kulluk was lifted off rocks at 10:10 p.m. Sunday.

It reached its anchoring point about 12 hours later in Kiliuda) Bay, where it’s out of the worst of waves and wind offered by the Gulf of Alaska.

Shell incident commander Sean Churchfield says the vessel came off the grounding relatively easy under tow by the 360-foot anchor handler Aiviq.

Mayor wants to name school after teacher

STRATFORD — The mayor of a city near Newtown, Conn., on Monday proposed naming a school after Victoria Soto, a teacher who was killed in last month’s elementary school massacre and hailed as a hero.

Soto, a 27-year-old resident of Stratford, was killed as she tried to shield her students from the gunman inside Sandy Hook Elementary School. The shooter killed 20 children and six women at the school on Dec. 14 before committing suicide.

Construction is scheduled next summer on a new elementary school in Stratford, and Stratford Mayor John Harkins said he wants it named for Soto. The name must be approved by the town council, which is expected to take up the matter at a Jan. 14 meeting.

It then ran out of the garage and bit Mundell’s 15-year-old nephew on the arms and back.

Mundell and his wife pinned the cat to the ground and shot it dead.

Mundell, his nephew and his wife, are being treated for rabies. His wife wasn’t bitten, but got the animal’s blood on her.

Hearings, trial closed in rape case

NEW DELHI — An Indian magistrate ruled Monday that the media will not be allowed to attend pretrial hearings or the trial of the five men accused of raping and killing a young student in the Indian capital, a police official said.

Magistrate Namrita Aggarwal upheld the prosecutor’s request that the media be barred from attending the proceedings, according to police spokesman Rajan Bhagat. Hundreds of journalists, lawyers from other cases and curious onlookers had crowded the courtroom where the five were to appear.

The five defendants later appeared before the magistrate, who scheduled another pretrial hearing Thursday that is expected to result in the case being sent to a special “fast-track” court. Indian rape trials are normally closed to the media.

Officials formally protest Indian attack

ISLAMABAD — The Pakistani Foreign Office said Monday it has protested formally to India for an attack on its army post.

A statement issued by the office said the Indian deputy high commissioner was summoned to the Foreign Ministry over what Pakistan calls an “unprovoked” attack Sunday.

The mostly Muslim mountainous Kashmir has been a flash point of violence between these two neighbors, who have fought two full-scale wars over control of the region.

Pakistan and India traded accusations Sunday of violating the cease-fire in the disputed northern Kashmir region.

Life sentences on opponents upheld

MANAMA — Bahrain’s highest court Monday upheld jail terms for 20 opposition figures — including eight sentenced to life — for alleged plots to “overthrow” the state in a decision likely to touch off more protests in the Gulf nation and bring renewed criticism from its Western allies.

The group includes a rights activist who staged a 110-day hunger strike last year to protest the verdicts, which critics have denounced as part of attempts to crush an Arab Spring-inspired uprising began nearly two years ago in the strategic island kingdom.

Authorities in Bahrain — which is home to the U.S. Navy’s 5th Fleet — accuse Iran of encouraging the Shiite-led protests as a way to undermine Bahrain’s pro-Western leadership and gain a key foothold on the doorstep of rival Saudi Arabia.

Antique plane collapses on runway

LONDON — Airport officials say an antique Spitfire aircraft owned by engine company Rolls-Royce collapsed shortly after landing at East Midlands Airport in central England.

The airport said in a statement the World War II-era plane’s undercarriage failed as it touched down Monday afternoon. The pilot was unharmed and the damaged aircraft was towed away.

The sleek-looking Spitfire played a pivotal role in the Battle of Britain, when the single-seat fighter helped beat back waves of German bombers. More than 20,000 were built, although only a few dozen remain in working order today.

Abbas moves to use State of Palestine name change

■ Leader also recognizes its use as limited

By Mohammed Daraghme
and Karin Laub
Associated Press

RAMALLAH, West Bank — With U.N. recognition of a Palestinian state in his pocket, President Mahmoud Abbas wants official documents to carry a new emblem: State of Palestine.

But scrapping the old Palestinian Authority logo is as far as Abbas is willing to go in provoking Israel. He is not rushing to change passports and ID cards Palestinians need to pass through Israeli crossings.

The very modesty of Abbas’ move to change official stationery underscores his limited options so long as Israel remains in charge of territories.

“At the end of the day, the Palestinian Authority won’t cause trouble for its people,” Nour Odeh, a spokeswoman for Abbas’ self-rule government, said of the need for caution.

Abbas won overwhelming U.N. General Assembly recognition for a state of Palestine in the West Bank, Gaza and East Jerusalem in late November, a rare diplomatic victory over a sidelined Israel. The U.N. nod was important to the Palestinians because it affirmed the borders of their future state in lands Israel captured in 1967.

Recognition, however, has not transformed the day-to-day lives of Palestinians, and some argue that it made things worse. In apparent retaliation for the U.N. bid, Israel in December withheld its monthly $100 million transfer of tax rebates it collects on behalf of the Palestinian Authority, further deepening the Abbas government’s financial crisis.

Israeli government spokesman Mark Regev dismissed the name change as pointless but declined to comment on whether Israel would retaliate in any way. “Instead of looking for gimmicks, Palestinians should negotiate with Israel to bring about the end of the conflict,” he said. “That will lead to a situation of two states for two peoples.”

Israel objected to Abbas’ U.N. bid, accusing him of trying to bypass negotiations with Israel on the terms of statehood. Abbas has said negotiations remain his preferred choice and that U.N. recognition was meant to improve his leverage with a far more powerful Israel once talks resume.

Speech by Assad meets with world

By Barbara Surk
Associated Press

BEIRUT — U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon on Monday expressed disappointment with Syrian President Bashar Assad for rejecting the most important elements of an international road map to end the country’s civil war — a political handover and establishment of a transitional governing body.

In a rare speech Sunday, Assad outlined his vision for ending the country’s conflict with a plan that would keep him in power. He also dismissed any chance of dialogue with the armed opposition and called on Syrians to fight what he called “murderous criminals.”

U.N. spokesman Martin Nesirky said Monday the secretary-general is disappointed that Assad’s speech “does not contribute to a solution that could end the terrible suffering of the Syrian people.”

The West, including the U.S. and Britain, denounced Assad’s speech, which came amid stepped-up international efforts for a peaceful settlement to the Syrian conflict.

The violence on the ground, meanwhile, continued unabated.

Syria’s state media said Monday that troops repulsed a rebel attack on a police school in the city of Aleppo.

The official SANA news agency said regime forces killed and wounded members of a “terrorist group” in the fighting late Sunday, but did not provide a number. The government and the pro-regime media refer to the rebels seeking to topple Assad as terrorists.

The county will have to hire two full-time employees and one part-time one to provide the program, which Henderson Fiscal Court will vote on this morning. But McCormick said he sees little problem getting approval because the program is practically all positive.

"Our numbers have been up and down, up and down," he said. "They fluctuate all the time. This will stabilize that with 50 of them in there getting this treatment."

Furthermore, he added, it will help rehabilitate people. "Hopefully it will help people, help them get back on the right track. Not everybody sitting in the proposed hybrid plan.

Beshear said he's also hopeful lawmakers can pass a package of tax reforms, saying most people have come to realize Kentucky needs more revenue. A group of experts appointed by Beshear to review the state's tax code proposed a model that would generate about $690 million a year in additional revenue.

The governor had asked the group to recommend a simpler tax code that would generate enough revenue to meet the state's needs even during economic recessions, the last of which led to about $1.6 billion in state budget cuts.

Beshear also wants lawmakers to consider legalizing casino-style gambling as a way to generate cash. But he sounded less than optimistic last week about the chances of getting that through the legislature this year.

In another potentially time-consuming move, House Speaker Greg Stumbo, D-Prestonsburg, wants to pass legislation that would hold accountable more than 1,200 special taxing districts that spend some $2.7 billion a year. Taxing districts, which collect money to operate everything from rural fire departments to libraries, have proliferated across Kentucky during the past 50 years with little accountability. Stumbo said creating a stronger system of oversight is critical.

"We think this program will be wonderful for the community even though we don't pick who goes into these programs. The state of Kentucky will pick those."

The local jail currently has about 180 state inmates, he said, "and this will be 50 more" on a permanent basis.

The jail started out with 280 beds in the mid-1990s and after four additions is now up to 590 beds. More recently the county erected a building that will have a training classroom, which was already needed, but it was also built in hopes of landing the substance abuse program.

Legislative leaders still are debating whether to take on redistricting this year.

Stumbo wants to move as quickly as possible to redraw boundaries around legislative districts. Incoming Senate President Robert Stivers, R-Manchester, said lawmakers aren't rushed because the next round of legislative elections isn't until 2014.

A legislative redistricting plan approved last year was later rejected by the Kentucky Supreme Court. Justices found that the districts were not balanced by population and had to be reworked to comply with the "one person, one vote" mandate in federal and state law.

Redistricting is supposed to occur every 10 years to account for population changes found by the U.S. Census Bureau.

Vietnam veteran to head the Pentagon.

"These two leaders have dedicated their lives to protecting our country," Obama said, standing alongside them and the men they would succeed during a ceremony in the White House East Room. "I urge the Senate to confirm them as soon as possible so we can keep our nation secure and the American people safe."

For Obama, a pair of combative confirmation hearings could turn into a distraction as he opens his second term. But the president signaled he was ready to take that risk.

Hagel, a former Republican senator from Nebraska, has been criticized as hostile toward Israel and soft on Iran. Opponents also have highlighted his 1998 comments about an ambassador nominee whom he called "openly, aggressively gay" — a comment for which he recently apologized.

Brennan, a 25-year CIA veteran, was under consideration to run the agency after Obama won the 2008 election but withdrew his name amid criticism from liberal activists who questioned his connection to the harsh interrogation techniques used by the CIA during the George W. Bush administration.

One of Hagel's toughest critics, Sen. Lindsay Graham, R-S.C., called his former colleague's foreign policy views "outside the mainstream" and said he would be "the most antagonistic secretary of defense toward the state of Israel in our nation's history."

Perhaps even more concerning for Hagel's prospects has been the tepid response from some Democrats. Sen. Chuck Schumer of New York said Hagel had earned the right to a full and fair confirmation hearing, but he reserved judgment on whether he would back him. And Maryland's Democratic Sen. Ben Cardin said he and other lawmakers "have questions that have to be answered" specifically on Hagel's views on Iran and Israel.

Obama called Hagel "the leader our troops deserve" and someone who could make "tough fiscal choices" in a time of increasing austerity.

The 66-year-old former senator has defended his record on Israel and Iran. In an interview Monday with the Lincoln (Neb.) Journal Star newspaper, Hagel accused his opponents of having "completely distorted" his views.

Hagel has criticized discussion of a military strike by either the U.S. or Israel against Iran. During his tenure in the Senate, he voted against unilateral economic sanctions on Tehran, though he supports the joint international penalties Obama also prefers. Hagel also irritated some Israel backers with his reference to the "Jewish lobby" in the United States.

The White House focused instead Monday on the military record of Hagel, who was awarded two Purple Hearts.

GOP scoffs at Obama's 'no-negotiation'

President insists he's willing to discuss some spending cuts

By Charles Babington

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Barack Obama, meet Congressman Michael Burgess.

The president says he absolutely will not let Republicans threaten a national debt ceiling crisis as a way to extract deeper federal spending cuts.

Burgess' take? "It's the most preposterous thing I've ever heard," the Texas Republican says. "He's going to have to negotiate."

Both sides may be bluffing, of course. They may reach an agreement before the debt-limit matter becomes a crisis in March, or possibly late February.

But the tough talk suggests this year's political fight could be even nastier and more nerve-grating than the recent "fiscal cliff" showdown, or the July 2011 brinkmanship that triggered the first-ever ratings downgrade of the nation's creditworthiness.

Asked about the White House's apparent assumption that Republicans will back down, Burgess said: "I'm not going to foreclose on anything, but that's just not going to happen."

He is hardly alone.

On NBC's "Meet the Press" Sunday, Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., repeatedly declined to say he would rule out a government shutdown, prompted by a debt-ceiling impasse, in the effort to force Obama to swallow large spending cuts. "It's a shame that we have to use whatever leverage we have in Congress" to force the White House to negotiate, he said.

In fact, congressional Republicans of all stripes say Obama has no choice but to accept spending cuts they want in exchange for a hike in the debt ceiling, which will reach its limit in about two months. Said McConnell: "We simply cannot increase the nation's borrowing limit without committing to long-overdue reforms to spending programs that are the very cause of our debt."

Obama says he's willing to discuss spending cuts in some programs. But that discussion, he says, must not be tied to GOP threats to keep the government from borrowing the money it needs to keep paying its bills, including interest on foreign-held debt.

"I will not have another debate with this Congress over whether or not they should pay the bills that they have already racked up through the laws that they passed," the pres-

"That will no doubt increase the ability to give the public and those in harm's way information that something could happen."

Spaeth said meteorologists at the weather office received training for the new technology, but instead of completely changing the way forecasters process the data, the upgrades provide additional images for analysis.

"I don't imagine we'll flip a switch, and it's a mass improvement right away," Spaeth said. "But with time we'll be able to get better at our interpretation."

Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell of Kentucky, followed by Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kansas, leaves the Senate chamber on Capitol Hill in Washington last week. ident said last week. "If Congress refuses to give the United States government the ability to pay these bills on time, the consequences for the entire global economy would be catastrophic."

It once was fairly routine for Congress to raise the government's borrowing limit every year or two, to keep paying bills in times of deficit spending. But the exercise became fiercely partisan in 2011.

Republicans threatened to block a debt ceiling hike unless Obama and congressional Democrats agreed to large but mostly unspecified spending cuts. Obama negotiated furiously. In hopes of a far-reaching "grand bargain," he offered to raise premiums, co-payments and the eligibility age for Medicare, and to slow the cost-of-living increases for Social Security benefits.

House Republicans demanded more. Foreshadowing the recent "fiscal cliff" quarrels, they embarrassed Speaker John Boehner, R-Ohio, by forcing him to rewrite debt-limit legislation to include a hopeless bid to amend the Constitution to require balanced budgets.

In the end, Republicans settled for about $1 trillion in spending cuts over 10 years. The government barely avoided having to stop paying some bills. Financial markets were rattled, however, and Standard & Poor's lowered the nation's creditworthiness rating.

Obama says he will take a dramatically different approach this time. He will discuss possible spending cuts as part of a broad deficit-reduction package. But he will end the conversation, he says, if Republicans threaten to withhold cooperation on the debt limit unless he meets their cost-cutting demands.

Republican lawmakers spoke dismissively of Obama's challenge in interviews last week. Several laughed out loud at the president's remarks.

"He's out of his mind," said Rep. Trent Franks, R-Ariz. If Obama thinks Republicans will back off their demands, Franks said, he is "operating in his usual cloud of delusion."

"It's a major mistake for the president to be intractable," said Rep. Michele Bachmann, R-Minn. To think Republicans are bluffing, she said, "is a mighty mistake on his part."

Bachmann and Franks are among the GOP's most conservative members. But even many moderate Republicans hold similar views.

If the president thinks Republicans won't demand spending cuts as part of a debt-ceiling deal, "then he hasn't talked to a lot of members in our conference," said Rep. Jim Gerlach, R-Pa. Asked if it would be dangerous for the United States to default on its financial obligations, Gerlach replied: "We're in a dangerous situation now. We're $16 trillion in debt and climbing."

Until the fiscal cliff was resolved, Obama held political leverage on the issue of tax hikes. Now, Republicans say, with Obama vehement about raising the debt limit, the negotiating leverage for spending cuts is on their side.

"The debt ceiling is our next best opportunity to start controlling spending," said Rep. Steve Scalise, R-La., chairman of the conservative Republican Study Committee.

will take about two weeks to complete, as engineers must upgrade the radar's hardware.

While the upgrade takes place, the weather service will use radar data from surrounding offices in Evansville, Ind., and St. Louis to keep the office operational.

The president, who prefers to keep a tight inner circle, has close ties to both Hagel and Brennan. Obama and Hagel served together in the Senate and made several trips overseas. Brennan has become one of the president's most trusted advisers, working with him during the planning of the raid that led to the death of Sept. 11 mastermind Osama bin Laden and holding broad authority over the administration's counterterrorism operations.

If confirmed, Hagel and Brennan will join Secretary of State nominee John Kerry as Obama's key national security advisers in his second term. Kerry, a long-time Democratic senator from Massachusetts, is expected to be easily confirmed by his Capitol colleagues.

TIDE TAKES ANOTHER TITLE

■ Alabama rolls in 42-14 win over Irish

The Associated Press

MIAMI GARDENS, Fla. — Alabama romped to its second consecutive BCS championship, and third in four seasons, beating No. 1 Notre Dame 42-14 in a BCS championship game that was no classic after all.

AJ McCarron threw four touchdown passes and Eddie Lacy ran for 140 yards and scored twice for the second-ranked Crimson Tide, which scored on its first three drives and cruised to the second-most lopsided BCS championship game victory Monday.

Alabama (13-1) became the third team to win three national titles in four seasons since polls started being used to crown champions in 1936, and the first since Nebraska from 1994-97.

Tide coach Nick Saban now has won four national championships. Only Alabama's Paul "Bear" Bryant, with six, has more.

Alabama's Kevin Norwood catches a pass in front of Notre Dame's Bennett Jackson (2) and Matthias Farley (41) during the first half of Monday's BCS National Championship game in Miami.

The Fighting Irish (12-1) didn't score until they were down 35-0 late in the third quarter.

In a matchup of tradition-rich programs tied for the most AP national championships with eight, Notre Dame was looking for its first national championship in 24 years. The Crimson Tide got its ninth.

The Crimson Tide marched with ease on the opening drive, going 82 yards on five plays to take a 7-0 lead on Lacy's 20-yard touchdown run up the middle with 12:03 left in the first quarter.

Poor start has SEC staggering into league play

■ Coaches say it's too early to write off conference just yet

By Steve Megargee
Associated Press

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — The Southeastern Conference figured to take a step backward this season after being home of the national champions and having the most NBA draft picks of any league last year.

Still, few expected the SEC to get knocked around like it has during its non-conference schedule.

"I do think there are some teams going through some transitions just like we are," Vanderbilt coach Kevin Stallings said. "That's probably made for a little lesser performance in nonconference play."

That has translated into mounting losses.

SEC teams have gone 3-6 against the Atlantic Coast Conference, 2-5 against the Big 12, 2-4 against the Big Ten, 4-13 against the Big East and 4-5 against the Pac-12. SEC teams also are just 3-11 against the Top 25. Missouri's 82-73 victory over No. 10 Illinois on Dec. 22 is the SEC's lone win over a top-10 team in eight attempts.

The SEC's nonconference performance could mean that going slightly above .500 in conference play may not be enough to reach the NCAA tournament.

Alabama visits No. 10 Missouri today in the season's first conference game.

SEC coaches say it's too early to panic — or to write the conference off.

Florida's Billy Donovan believes it's unfair to base a league's reputation solely on its November or December performance.

"I never really agreed with that," Donovan said. "I think teams get better. I think the one thing that's happened in our league is a lot of teams in our league have lost a lot of people. Kentucky's lost a lot. Vanderbilt's lost a lot. Mississippi State's got a new coach. South Carolina's got a new coach. There's been a lot of turnover in personnel of key guys."

Florida guard Kenny Boynton is the lone first-team or second-team all-

SEC performer from last season who has played at all this year. The only other 2011-12 all-conference player to return to school was Tennessee forward Jeronne Maymon, who is redshirting this season because of an injured left knee.

Each of the top three picks in the 2012 draft came from SEC programs: Kentucky teammates Anthony Davis and Michael-Kidd Gilchrist and Florida guard Bradley Beal. The SEC had 12 players drafted overall. That figure moves up to 15 if you include Missouri teammates Kim English and Marcus Denmon and Texas A&M's Khris Middleton, who went to college while their schools still belonged to the Big 12.

All those departures have made an impact.

Only two SEC teams are ranked in the Top 25: Missouri and No. 11 Florida. Every school in the conference already has at least two losses. Vanderbilt (6-6), Auburn (6-7), Georgia (5-7) and Mississippi State (5-7) are all at .500 or below.

"If we're going to start judging teams on who we are in November or December... let's have the tournament Jan. 1," South Carolina coach Frank Martin said. "But if the tournament's going to be in March and April, let the season play out and let coaches do their job."

Donovan cited last year's Tennessee team as evidence of how a team can improve over the course of a season. After losing six of its first nine games last year in Tennessee coach Cuonzo Martin's debut season, the Volunteers went 10-6 in conference play.

"You cannot argue that Tennessee in February and March was totally different than Tennessee in November and December," Donovan said. "I think that's what you're going to see inside of our league."

Tennessee's 10-6 conference record still wasn't good enough to reach the NCAA tournament because of its subpar non-conference resume. SEC teams are crossing their fingers that the conference's poor early-season performance won't cause problems with the NCAA tournament selection committee this year.

"I think the SEC's a solid conference no matter what," Tennessee guard Jordan McRae said. "You've still got Florida, Kentucky, Missouri, teams like that. ... If you win those games, that should be enough to get you to the tournament."

Maybe, but the league will likely have to overcome its unimpressive nonconference play. The SEC had three schools ranked among the nation's top 15 teams in the preseason: No. 3 Kentucky, No. 10 Florida and No. 15 Missouri.

Not only have SEC schools lost the majority of their games against other major-conference teams, they've struggled against teams from traditional one-bid leagues.

Auburn lost to Winthrop. Mississippi State fell to Alabama A&M. Texas A&M couldn't handle Southern. Youngstown State defeated Georgia. Mercer beat Alabama.

"If you want to say at this point in time, the SEC's maybe had some difficult, challenging, tough losses... I think that's a fair assessment," Donovan said. "But to say the league is down or bad, I don't think that would be fair until we've seen the whole thing play out."

Not even defending national champion Kentucky has been immune. Kentucky (9-4) already has doubled its loss total from last season as it attempts to replace six draft picks. The Wildcats have won five of six since losing consecutive games to Notre Dame and Baylor.

"We've lost some games, but those teams that we've lost to haven't lost many games," Kentucky coach John Calipari said. "And we weren't ready — when you're playing four freshmen — to beat those kind of guys."

Defending conference tournament champion Vanderbilt has made a steeper decline after losing first-round draft picks John Jenkins and Festus Ezeli plus second-round selection Jeffery Taylor. In its fourth game of the season, Vanderbilt lost 50-33 to Marist, a Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference program with a 4-11 record.

Stallings is hopeful his young team will turn the corner. He also believes his conference will bounce back soon. Noting that Florida nearly gave the SEC two Final Four teams last season, Stallings attributed the conference's early-season struggles to college basketball's cyclical nature.

"Whether it's cyclical or transitional or whatever you want to call it, it won't last long," Stallings said. "Trust me, it won't. Our league's too good for that. Historically, if we have a down year, we never stay down. That's just not the nature of our league."

Smithhart returns to Christian with new team

Gleaner staff

Tyler Smithhart returns to Christian County tonight as his Henderson County squad takes on his former team in Hopkinsville.

Smithhart left Christian County after one season as head coach and three as an assistant coach to become the head coach at his alma mater.

Henderson County is off to a 12-2 start and riding a five-game winning streak. Christian County is 8-5 but unbeaten in its only two games against Second Region competition — Madisonville (77-63) and University Heights (81-74).

Kyle Eades, who was on the Christian coaching staff with Smithhart, is the team's interim head coach. He took over for Josh Smith, who resigned because of health reasons three days before the team's first game.

Christian County does return five starters off the team that finished 9-22 last year but did reach the region semifinals and edged Henderson County 62-60 during the regular season.

Also tonight, Union County's boys (10-5) host Dawson Springs (2-11). Webster County's boys (9-7) will entertain Caldwell County (4-10), following the 6 p.m. contest between the Lady Trojans and Daviess County (6-9). Union County's girls (6-6) are on the road at Caldwell County (9-6).

Union County wrestlers win region duals

Gleaner staff

Union County dominated the regional duals on Saturday, cruising through its five matches and beating Fort Campbell 63-14 in the championship.

Fifteen of the Braves' wrestlers finished the day unbeaten. Bryce Sheffer, Rob DeZemmer, Brian French, Devin Smith and Bryan Carter were 5-0. Brock Ervin and Raynel Brown were 4-0.

"With the schedule we wrestle, our season is very demanding and sometimes it's hard for our guys to see why we wrestle such a tough schedule and go to so many out of state events. However, when they come back to our state, our region, and dominate like they did, they begin to understand how that schedule prepares them for success in the later part of the season," Union County coach Marcus Hoehn said.

Union County won its earlier matches 69-9 over Paducah Tilghman, 72-6 over Owensboro, 68-6 over Caldwell County and 58-18 over Trigg County.

The win qualifies the Braves for the state duals later this month at Fern Creek, where they will be looking to repeat as champions.

The Hoosiers' break-neck offense could rarely be stopped in the first half before the pace slowed down in a sloppy second half. But it barely mattered after Indiana (14-1, 2-0 Big Ten) built a 19-point lead in the first half behind Watford's inside-out game and Hulls' quick-release jumpers.

No wonder Indiana had the top scoring offense in the nation (87.9 points) entering Monday night's blowout.

Tournament of Champions finally gets underway

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

KAPALUA, Hawaii — Dustin Johnson got off to a good start Monday in the Tournament of Champions. Then again, just starting was good.

Three days behind schedule because of high wind, the PGA Tour finally got its 2013 season started on the day its first tournament was supposed to finish. Johnson, who showed up on Maui a week before the tournament and played just about every day, three-putted three times in five holes and still had a 4-under 69. That gave him a share of the lead with Mark Wilson and Nick Watney, who rolled in a long eagle putt on his last hole.

The 69s matched the highest score to lead after one round in 15 years this tournament has been held on the Plantation Course at Kapalua.

But there were no complaints. At least they were playing.

As long as Johnson has been at Kapalua, this was his first time playing a full round in five days. He was among four players who had not even teed off when the first round was scuttled on Friday and Sunday. It was too windy to even try to start on Saturday.

"Today was the first day I got on the course, but definitely felt good," Johnson said.

Rickie Fowler made history as the first player to hit the opening tee shot of the PGA Tour season three times. He was in the group at 3-under 70 that included Bubba Watson, Brandt Snedeker and Carl Pettersson. Defending champion Steve Stricker was another shot behind.

The players had about 30 minutes for lunch before going out for 18 more holes Monday afternoon, followed by a Tuesday finish of 18 holes. It would be the first time the Tournament of Champions was reduced to 54 holes since 1997 at rainy La Costa Resort.

The tournament finally caught a break when the wind subsided just enough as players were on the practice green under floodlights before sunrise. The greens were slowed to 8½ on the Stimpmeter — compared with 10½ on Friday — to help keep the balls from blowing off the green.

It still was plenty windy, though this mountainous course was built for that. Only six players in the 30-man field failed to break par.

But the green speed, combined with the wind, made it difficult.

Johnson's chip on the second hole came up 10 feet short, and he made that for par. He left his 20-foot birdie putt on the third hole about 4 feet short and missed that one, but answered by rolling in a 20-foot birdie that looked as if it would miss on the right side until the wind blew it back toward the hole.

Johnson walked off the green with a smile.

"Ride the wind, baby," he said. Johnson turned to see Watson hit an identical putt that stayed out to the right.

He didn't think it was that much of an advantage to have played the course so much in the days leading up to the tournament because the wind didn't arrive until Friday.

Title game emotional homecoming for leukemia survivor

By Tim Reynolds
Associated Press

MIAMI GARDENS, Fla. — When he was 14, Arturo Martinez was essentially told he was dying. Leukemia, stage IV. As bad as it gets.

He made beating cancer look easy.

And now he's a part of a team that played in a national championship game.

Martinez is a walk-on defensive lineman at Notre Dame, the nation's No. 1 team that lost to second-ranked Alabama in the BCS title game on Monday night. The game is in greater Miami, a return home for Martinez, who played high school football at Belen Jesuit — one of South Florida's top programs — and fell for Notre Dame after seeing a game there.

He won't be playing, but he couldn't care less.

"I keep telling my parents that I'm high on life right now," Martinez said. "I can't even describe the feeling of it. To come back to my hometown after all that I've been through and play, well, not play but at least be on the sideline, be part of the experience, be in the hotel with the team, practice at the Miami Dolphins facility, a team I grew up idolizing, this is unbelievable."

Martinez remembers every detail of the day when he was told by a doctor that he had non-Hodgkins lymphoma. He asked to meet one of his childhood idols, Miami Heat forward Udonis Haslem, and went to that meet-and-greet with no eyebrows — which were lost to his cancer treatments.

Before long, he had a clean bill of health and was back on the football field.

"Unbelievable. What a kid," said Rich Stuart, the coach at Belen. "Amazing story, amazing kid. There's so many different angles to this young man, it's amazing. He's loving it right now. He's the type of kid, if you had a daughter, you'd want her to marry him. He's athletic, intelligent and very spiritual. When you realize you get a second chance, you're very grateful. He's athletic, a good looking kid, and a gentleman on top of it. Such a great kid."

When the season began, Notre Dame was unranked. But Martinez remembers teasing his parents that maybe there would be a chance of everything coming together for the Irish.

Sure enough, here they are — and here he is. All players get six tickets for the BCS game. Martinez, obviously, had no problem finding takers for those.

"I could have used a lot more," Martinez said.

COACHES OF YEAR: Notre Dame coach Brian Kelly was one of four coaches announced Monday as winners of the Liberty Mutual Coach of the Year award.

Joining Kelly — the Football Bowl Subdivision winner — as honorees was Willie Fritz of Sam Houston State (Football Championship Subdivision); Peter Rossomando of New Haven (Division II) and Glenn Caruso of St. Thomas, Minn. (Division III).

Cauley-Stein earns SEC's weekly freshman honors

LEXINGTON — Kentucky forward Willie Cauley-Stein has been named the Southeastern Conference's freshman of the week.

The award was announced Monday after the Wildcats' 7-footer had 11 points and 11 rebounds in Wednesday's 90-38 blowout of Eastern Michigan. Cauley-Stein is the first Kentucky player to record multiple double-doubles this season; he had 12 points and 12 rebounds in an 88-56 win over Samford on Dec. 4.

He added two blocks and two steals in the game as Kentucky (9-4) held Eastern Michigan to 38 points on 24 percent shooting, both lows for the Wildcats under coach John Calipari.

Cauley-Stein — averaging 7.8 points, 5.9 rebounds and 2.1 blocks per game — joins teammates Archie Goodwin and Alex Poythress as Wildcats to have been named SEC freshman of the week.

Chiefs name Reid as new coach

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The first call that Andy Reid received came from Chiefs chairman Clark Hunt.

Reid had just been dismissed after coaching the Eagles for 14 seasons, and was back at his office after addressing his team one last time. The phone rang and Hunt was on the other end, asking whether Reid would be interested in a face-to-face meeting two days later.

"There are certain families that stand out, and the Hunt family is just tops," Reid said of the family that founded the franchise 53 years ago. "They're phenomenal."

The meeting was set for Wednesday in Philadelphia, and Reid's agent Bob LaMonte figured it would take about three hours. But when Reid got in front of Hunt, the two hit it off so well that time kept slipping away — four hours, then six, then eight hours of conversations.

After nine hours, it became clear that Reid would be the Chiefs' next coach.

He was introduced on Monday at a packed news conference at Arrowhead Stadium, taking over a once-proud franchise that went 2-14 last season and hasn't won a playoff game since 1993.

Kelly will stay as Oregon's coach

After a weekend rife with rumors and speculation, Chip Kelly and the Oregon Ducks are right back where they started.

Oregon's enigmatic head coach flirted with a trio of NFL teams over three days before deciding late Sunday to stay with the No. 5 Ducks.

On Monday it was back to business. Kelly was at a coaches' convention in Tennessee. Oregon did not formally announce Kelly's decision — for the school his status hadn't changed, he's still the head coach.

Rondo suspended for bumping official

NEW YORK — Boston Celtics point guard Rajon Rondo has been suspended again, with coach Doc Rivers wondering if it's as much for Rondo's reputation as the incident.

Rondo was banned one game without pay Monday for making contact with a referee and failure to cooperate with an NBA investigation.

With 3:19 remaining in the third quarter of the Celtics' 89-81 victory over the Atlanta Hawks on Sunday, Rondo was called for an offensive foul on a drive to the basket. He went up to referee Rodney Mott and bumped into him as the two walked back up the court.

"I saw it when it happened. I didn't think anything of it honestly, and obviously the officials didn't either, they didn't call a tech," Rivers said before the game. "But you know the old saying is you're not given a reputation, you earn one, and I'm sure that had a lot to do with it as well."

Love will be out 'a number of weeks'

MINNEAPOLIS — Minnesota Timberwolves forward Kevin Love met with doctors in the Twin Cities on Monday to evaluate his right hand, which is broken for the second time this season.

Timberwolves president of basketball operations David Kahn says Love also will consult with a hand specialist in New York this week before determining a course of action. There is no timetable for his return, but Kahn says Love will be out for "a number of weeks."

Love missed the first three weeks of the season after breaking his hand during the preseason. He broke it again last week in Denver.

NHL lockout over, 48-game schedule is 'most likely'

The NHL appears headed toward a 48-game season for the second time in two decades.

"I think 48 is most likely at this point, unless the players can expedite their ratification process," NHL deputy commissioner Bill Daly wrote in an email Monday to The Associated Press.

The NHL shortened its 82-game slate to 48 games for the 1994-95 season after a 103-day lockout. A 301-day lockout in 2004-05 made the NHL the first major North American professional sports league to lose an entire season.

When the framework of a new collective bargaining agreement was agreed to Sunday morning — after 16 hours of negotiations — there was some talk of having a 50-game season start later this month.

Berkman joins Rangers as DH

ARLINGTON, Texas — Lance Berkman chose the Texas Rangers this time, and is returning to his home state to be their designated hitter in what likely will be the last stop of his career.

The Rangers completed a $10 million, one-year deal Monday after the 36-year-old Berkman, who played only 32 games last season for St. Louis, passed a physical. The deal includes a $12 million club option for 2014 that becomes a guaranteed $13 million deal if he has 550 plate appearances this season. There is also a $1 million buyout for the second year.

Berkman provides the potential big bat for the middle of the lineup the Rangers were seeking after losing slugger Josh Hamilton and catcher Mike Napoli in free agency.

Globetrotters win game on ice

PORTAGE, Mich. — The Harlem Globetrotters say they hope that deprived NHL fans have taken some comfort in watching basketball on ice.

The sporty entertainers strapped on custom cleats and hockey helmets for their basketball game on ice Monday in West Michigan. Dozens of fans braved the blustery winds as they watched the Globetrotters beat Global select 24-10 at Millennium Park in Portage.

Gold standard in college sports now resides in Louisville

Price of bullion is up, way up. The gold standard, defined by Kentucky's Mitch Barnhart last year, has been reset and belongs in Jefferson County.

As we head into mid-winter, University of Louisville athletics is on a hot streak that dazzles the mind of even the most ardent fan in Big Blue Nation.

U of L has a Sugar Bowl trophy and $17 million dollars (before the Big East takes its cut).

Rick Pitino's team survived archrival Kentucky, is ranked in the top five, and hasn't lost a game since before Thanksgiving.

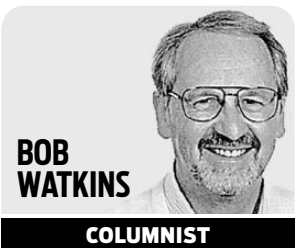

Kentucky Mr. Football, James Quick is staying home. The MVP from Armed Forces Bowl, will sign with Louisville next month instead of Ohio State.

U of L's women's basketball team was 12-3 last week and ranked No. 11.

From the Add On Dept. A few streets over from Belknap campus, Scotty Davenport's Bellarmine team is unbeaten in a dozen games.

Charlie Strong has a commit already from Trinity High School's next quarterback.

And, as geographically illogical as it is, Louisville will be a Tobacco Road program next year.

Oh, and Rick Pitino's horse Avare won $75 grand at Santa Anita last week.

Gold Standard stuff. Among the revenue-makers ...

Charlie Strong, aside from a little Tennessee waltz, walked the walk and his Cardinals put a gloss on an 11-2 season by thrashing a bunch of guys and handful of hooligans dressed up as Florida Gators.

Next? Quarterback Teddy Bridgewater is already a Heisman Trophy candidate. Treat to come: Watch progress and media gush over hopeful Bridgewater and Heisman holder Johnny Manziel, Texas A&M.

Pitino's team, led by a senior and five juniors, is on track to a No. 1 seed in March, but also produced a record 3.41 team GPA last semester.

Football, a bowl win, basketball, rankings, GPA and recruiting.

We know where the gold standard is in our Commonwealth and where it isn't.

KENTUCKY

While University of Kentucky fans have paid more for less (football) and (NBA D-League) home basketball games, maybe Jefferson County gold standard, instead of being resented, should be a model worth study and imitation.

Mark Stoops and Neal Brown have honeymoon time and opportunity to recast football, get up to Louisville's level. Remember, the team U of L embarrassed in New Orleans is same Florida that collared Kentucky 38-0.

Charlie Strong needed three years to meld credibility-to-recruit, think big time, then win big time, and carry momentum into next season. Why can't Kentucky do the same?

Basketball. UK recruiting success is the gold standard in college hoops. Yet, since UK fans expect national titles, their teams have only one in four years. Will 25 percent satisfy the faithful?

Only one player, as John Calipari calls them, has been at UK long enough to put the word experience on his resume. Thanks to Maysville, and Billy Clyde Gillispie, Darius Miller stands as alone as role model deluxe. Miller has the big triple — NCAA title ring, college degree and regular NBA paychecks.

Bottom line? Kentucky needs new emphasis on name on front of jersey and less about Cal's crow, "At Kentucky it's all about the players."

Kentucky basketball has been about more than players, and more than an NBA farm team for more than seven decades. The program's real owners are millions of fans of all ages who buy tickets, merchandise and, most of all, invest love and respect for student-athletes who want to play basketball where it is revered most, in Kentucky.

FRESH BREEZE AT UK

Here came a fresh breeze for UK basketball fans last weekend.

In front of ESPN cameras Dakari Johnson chose Kentucky over Georgetown and Syracuse. The 6-10, 250-pounder's reasons made the big kid's college pick special.

Why Kentucky? Johnson skipped the mercenary "Kentucky can get me to the league!" line, stayed politically correct — wants to win a national championship. And likes the idea of coaches pushing him, make him better.

Best part? "... I'm a good teammate," he said. "I'm a good person on and off the floor."

Then came the magic and that causes Kentucky fans to fall in love. The smile.

BOWL NOTES

■ Ohio State, Alabama and ... Louisville will be in the top 5 out of the chute next season. And, four games into the season, three at home, the Cards should have completed its pre-league patsy-portion 4-0, (Ohio U, Eastern Kentucky, (at) Kentucky and Florida International).

■ Grand Lesson. Florida's humiliation in the Sugar Bowl is worth a video for every coach who gets his team bowl eligible and needs a pregame speech. "Gentlemen, you're about to see what happens when you go home for Christmas and only your silhouette comes back."

■ Sa-LUTE to Vanderbilt and Northwestern. The Commodores (9-4) and Wildcats (10-3) wallowed North Carolina State and Mississippi State respectively in bowl games, to wrap up school record seasons.

Vandy defeated Northwestern in September and was set to host the Wildcats in Nashville in 2013, but canceled because the 'Dores had five non-SEC games schedule. Vandy also canceled a game at Ohio State next season.

MILESTONE MABRY

Pleasure Ridge Park's Dale Mabry entered Ball Coaches Golden Circle last week, and solidified his Hall of Fame resume. Our state's third high school basketball coach to reach 800 wins. Mabry's name is in distinguished company with William Kean and Billy Hicks.

Reactions to his milestone, Mabry showed proper modesty and good wit, "... just means I've been around too long," he told a television reporter.

Mabry credited assistants Larry Kihnley and Mike Baxter and all those who played at PRP during his 32 years.

Mabry's success is as much about consistency as 800 wins. In PRP's last seven seasons, the Panthers won more than 20 games six times. The Panthers won the state championship in 1990.

Dale Mabry has not "stayed too long," but has devoted 32 years of life to school and community.

What higher tribute?

Ravens need more than emotion to beat Denver

■ Lewis' retirement fuels 24-9 win over Colts

By David Ginsburg

Associated Press

OWINGS MILLS, Md. — Fueled with emotion from the impending retirement of Ray Lewis and a fervent home crowd, the Baltimore Ravens dispatched the Indianapolis Colts in the opening round of the AFC playoffs.

It's going to take more than just unbridled enthusiasm to knock off the top-seeded Denver Broncos on Saturday.

In defeating Indianapolis 24-9 on Sunday, the Ravens (11-6) drew inspiration from a crowd that never stopped cheering before, during and after Lewis' final home game. The standout middle linebacker intends to retire after Baltimore's playoff run, and the Ravens had no intention of seeing Lewis end his 17-year career with a home loss.

"It had to have an impact. The emotions were real," coach John Harbaugh said Monday. "It was tangible. We all felt it."

Now, however, the Ravens take to the road to face the Broncos (13-3), who have won 11 straight — including a 34-17 rout in Baltimore on Dec. 16. The Ravens should have plenty of spirit left from Sunday, but Harbaugh isn't necessarily counting on it.

"There's probably an element that we'll carry forward because you're always building on what you are," he said. "Hopefully we take all the things that happened and we take it into that game emotionally and carry it with us. But this is a new game. It's a whole new environment. It's a whole new situation for us. So I think the slate is wiped clean in that sense. This will be a new challenge for us."

And what a challenge it is.

Not only do the Broncos own the best record in the AFC, but they're coming off a bye and playing in high altitude against a team they've already beaten handily.

Oh, and there's also the matter of Peyton Manning, who's 2-0 lifetime against Baltimore in the postseason.

Manning vs. Ray Lewis with everything on the line. It doesn't get much better than that.

"They are always classic," Lewis said. "It's just one of those chess matches. He knows me very well. I know him very well. ... But at the end of the day, it's not about me and me and Peyton. It's about their team against our team. I love our team right now."

And the Ravens, in turn, love their leader. All the players, as well as the coaching staff, savored the once-in-a-lifetime scene at M&T Bank Stadium on Sunday.

"The crowd was incredible. It was one of those historic moments that anybody that was there is never going to forget," Harbaugh said. "I was so proud of our fans, so pleased that we all have something that we will be able to talk to our kids and our grandkids about — a Baltimore football moment that's going to live on. That's kind of why you do this, to be part of moments like this."

Lewis was in the middle of it all, playing for the first time in 12 weeks after being sidelined with a torn right triceps. He returned to lead the Ravens with 13 tackles and provided his usual unyielding leadership.

"He played well. He was physical at the point of attack, he did a good job in the pass game," Harbaugh said. "He held up pretty well."

When the Ravens faced

Denver last month, the Broncos raced to a 31-3 lead and coasted to the finish. But Baltimore played that game without Lewis, safety Bernard Pollard, guard Marshal Yanda and tight end Ed Dickson. All will be available Saturday.

"It's got to be a positive," Harbaugh said. "We're more full strength now than we've ever been all year. So it's the right time to be healthy, and I'm hoping those guys will have a big impact."

Seahawks solve 29 years of playoff futility on road

By Tim Booth

Associated Press

RENTON, Wash. — Instead of reveling in shaking 29 years of postseason road futility and completely looking ahead to another cross-country trip, Pete Carroll was left waiting Monday for the results of an MRI that only confirmed what the Seattle Seahawks originally feared.

Seattle will go forward in the postseason without pass-rushing defensive end Chris Clemons, who suffered a torn ACL and torn meniscus in his left knee in Sunday's 24-14 win at Washington.

Clemons was hurt when it appeared his cleat got stuck in the messy, dirty turf at FedEx Field early in the third quarter. Seattle was immediately concerned the injury could be serious and Monday's scan confirmed it.

"It's a big loss for us in a lot of ways," Carroll said. "Chris has been a great football player and just a symbol of consistency in the years that we've had him, but he's been a great leader for us too and a tough dude and a guy we've become very comfortable playing with and we'll miss the heck out of him."

The loss of Clemons

EVAN VUCCI/ASSOCIATED PRESS

and uncertainty about the availability of kicker Steven Hauschka, who suffered a calf strain, overshadowed what should have been a day of celebration after Seattle won its first road playoff game since beating Miami on Dec. 31, 1983.

Clemons was the most consistent pass rusher for the Seahawks since arriving in a trade from Philadelphia before the 2010 season. Clemons had 11 sacks in both 2010 and '11 and followed up a new contract over the summer with 11½ sacks this season.

Rookie first-round pick Bruce Irvin, drafted to be a pass-rushing complement to Clemons, will get the first shot to start. Irvin set a franchise rookie record with eight sacks, but the real challenge will be whether he can hold up in the run game, an area where Clemons did well.

"This is Bruce's opportunity. This is what we drafted him to play and we'll see how he does," Carroll said. "We expect him to do really well as he steps up."

Players were not available at the Seahawks facility after arriving back in Seattle in the early hours of Monday morning. Clemons tweeted, "I want to thank everyone for ... prayers. I will be ready for next season. We still got a Super Bowl to win!"

Even with Clemons going down, the Seahawks continued to display a level of resolve that has now carried them to six straight wins and eight of their last nine. Despite falling behind 14-0, Seattle solved the defensive problems that allowed Washington to roll down the field on its first two possessions. In turn, Russell Wilson, Marshawn Lynch and the Seahawks offense was given time to chip away at the two-touchdown deficit.

The 14-point hole was the largest deficit overcome in Seahawks playoff history and the largest of any game this season. Wilson directed Seattle back from a 23-10 fourth-quarter deficit to beat New England 24-23 in Week 6. Being down 14 in the first quarter seemed easy compared to that.

"I think people take notice we've put together a lot of games together," Carroll said. "When you look at our schedule you can misread the schedule a little bit if you just look at the W's and the L's. We've played really good solid football for a long time. It hasn't just sprung up at the end of the season."

Seattle's sudden defensive change was helped by hobbling Washington quarterback Robert Griffin III, but also by the Seahawks not overthinking. Carroll said he was concerned that with the intricate details of learning how Washington runs its unique offense that his defenders could be thinking too much early in the game.

But instead of sticking with the zone-read plays Seattle was ready for, the Redskins simply used Alfred Morris to run right at the Seahawks. Washington had 129 total yards in the first quarter and just 74 the rest of the way.

The sticky defense allowed Wilson and Lynch time to get Seattle's offense clicking. After falling behind 14-0, the Seahawks had five drives of 60 or more yards, including a 68-yard drive to start the second half that ended without points after Lynch fumbled at the Washington 1. Lynch atoned for the mistake with his go-ahead 27-yard TD run in the fourth quarter.

Seattle rushed for 224 yards as a team, the highest total in franchise history for a playoff game, and third time during its six-game win streak they have topped 200 yards on the ground.

RGIII, teammates defend decision to keep playing

By Joseph White

Associated Press

ASHBURN, Va. — As the Washington Redskins awaited word on Robert Griffin III's health, teammates defended the rookie quarterback's decision to keep playing after reinjuring his right knee.

Griffin also chimed in. He did not appear in the locker room during the two hours it was open to reporters Monday morning, but offered some thoughts on Twitter.

"Many may question, criticize & think they have all the right answers. But few have been in the line of fire in battle," Griffin tweeted.

The Redskins were expected to announce results of Griffin's MRI later Monday.

Already playing with a heavy black brace in his third game since spraining a ligament in his knee, Griffin hurt the knee again when he fell awkwardly while throwing a pass in the first quarter of Sunday's 24-14 playoff loss to the Seattle Seahawks.

Griffin stayed in the game, but he was far from his usual self, clearly favoring the knee and unable to run with the world-class speed that helped define his play early in the season.

Then, in the fourth quarter with the Redskins trailing by seven, the knee buckled the wrong way when Griffin tried to field a bad snap.

The Seahawks recovered the fumble deep in Washington territory, setting up a short field goal that helped put the game out of reach. Griffin was done for the night.

If Griffin had been pulled earlier, the critical turnover might not have happened. And, of course, his knee probably wouldn't be hurt as badly as it is.

"I thank God for perspective and because of that I appreciate the support from everyone. I also appreciate the criticism," Griffin tweeted.

Coach Mike Shanahan said after the game he essentially left the decision for Griffin to keep playing in Griffin's hands.

"It's a slippery slope, I guess you can say, because you want to help the team," said receiver Pierre Garcon, who faced similar questions this season while dealing with a painful toe injury. "But you want to help yourself in the long run and your career."

Businesses explore offering ‘no children’ option

By Katherine Albers
Scripps Howard News Service

When dining at the Blue Windows Bistro in Fort Myers, Fla., bring your appetite, but leave your children at home.

Christian Vivet, the chef and owner, said the decision to ask patrons to leave children home was simple.

“Our restaurant is very small. We can only seat 35 people. We’re a white-tablecloth restaurant,” he said. “The average ticket is $50 to $55; that’s a fairly expensive night out for people.”

As the nation ages, more businesses like Blue Windows are catering exclusively to adults. If it sounds like a recipe for disaster, it’s not. In fact, experts say it actually might be a good bet for some businesses.

Empty nesters wield a huge swath of discretionary spending and about 45 percent of U.S. households do not have children younger than 18, according to U.S. census figures.

Blue House Bistro’s website reads, “While we love young children and have raised a hand-full of them, our little Bistro features Adult Dining. We do not have a children’s menu, no high chairs, nor booster seats, crayons, etc. For your dining pleasure and the pleasure of those around you, we suggest that you hire a trusted baby sitter for your special night out.”

Still, Vivet said he doesn’t turn customers with children away and mentions regulars who bring their preteen children to eat at the restaurant. He said the system has worked well because they are honest with their customers before they come to the restaurant.

“If you’re up front, nobody’s disappointed,” Vivet said.

Gary Jackson, a professor of economics and director of the Florida Gulf Coast University Lutgert College of Business, said marketing exclusively to adults can be beneficial to some businesses.

“Tastes and preferences vary over age groups,” he said. “Companies are always looking to create value for their constituents, so it makes sense. You are trying to cater to the preferences of the group.”

MCDONALD’S TESTS WINGS

The Associated Press

First there were McNuggets. Then there were Chicken McBites. Now McDonald’s could be adding “Mighty Wings” to its chicken menu. The world’s biggest hamburger chain is set to expand its test of chicken wings to Chicago this week, after a successful run in Atlanta last year. Fast-food chains typically test items in select markets before taking them national. But for McDonald’s, which has 14,000 U.S. locations, adding chicken wings to the permanent lineup could be tricky. Prices for chicken wings have been climbing because of increasing demand. So McDonald’s could offer the dish on a limited-time offer in the months ahead. The chain has tried to ramp up such offers as a way to give customers more variety.

Bank of America to pay $11 billion in mortgage claims settlement

By Steve Rothwell
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Bank of America reached an $11.6 billion settlement with government mortgage agency Fannie Mae to settle claims resulting from mortgage-backed investments that soured during the housing crash, bringing it a step closer to clearing up its legacy of bad home loans.

Under the deal announced Monday, Bank of America will pay $3.6 billion in cash to Fannie Mae and buy back $6.75 billion in loans that the bank and its Countrywide Financial unit sold to the agency from Jan. 1, 2000 through Dec. 31, 2008. That includes about 30,000 loans. The bank is also paying $1.3 billion to the agency for failing to deal with foreclosures fast enough.

Also Monday, a separate settlement was announced between federal regulators and ten major banks and mortgage companies, including Bank of America, over wrongful foreclosure practices.

That $8.5 billion settlement covers up to 3.8 million people who were in foreclosure in 2009 and 2010. Of those, about 400,000 may be entitled to payments, advocates estimate.

For Bank of America, its own settlement with Fannie Mae over the mortgage investments represents a “significant step” in resolving the bank’s remaining mortgage problems, Bank of America CEO Brian Moynihan said in a statement. Moynihan’s predecessor, Ken Lewis, bought Countrywide, a troubled mortgage-lending giant, in July 2008 just as the financial crisis was taking hold.

The settlement represents “another step closer to normal,” for Bank of America, Wells Fargo analyst Matt Burnell wrote in a note to clients.

Burnell said the deal was good for the bank because it resolved a dispute with a government agency and will likely reduce the provisions it has to set aside to cover claims from investors over faulty mortgages sold with incorrect data on home values or income.

Bank of America’s acquisition of Countrywide was initially praised by lawmakers because the lender was seen as stepping in to support the mortgage industry. However, instead of boosting Bank of America’s mortgage business, the purchase has drawn a drumbeat of regulatory fines, lawsuits and losses.

Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac buy mortgages from banks and package them together as bonds that they sell to investors.

During the housing boom, banks sold loans to the two agencies that should never have been issued, because the banks failed to carry out the necessary diligence before making them.

The government agencies, which were effectively nationalized in 2008 when they nearly collapsed under the weight of their mortgage losses, have been demanding that banks buy back some of the mortgage-backed investments.

In September, Bank of America also agreed to pay $2.43 billion to settle a class-action lawsuit related to its takeover of Merrill Lynch, another of Lewis’ acquisitions during the financial crisis.

That lawsuit was filed on behalf of investors who bought or held Bank of America stock when the company announced its plans to buy Merrill Lynch in a $20 billion deal as the banking industry and federal regulators struggled to contain fallout from the financial crisis in the fall of 2008.

The Charlotte, North Carolina-based bank said it would pay for the Fannie Mae settlement in part from existing reserves, though it would record a $2.7 billion hit to its fourth quarter earnings for 2012 from the settlement and the loan servicing fees, as well as taking a charge of $2.5 billion for the settlement over wrongful foreclosure practices.

Despite the charges, Bank of America still expects its earnings for the period to be “modestly positive.”

Bank of America is scheduled to report earnings Jan. 17.

Banks to pay billions over complaints

WASHINGTON — Ten major banks and mortgage companies agreed Monday to pay $8.5 billion to settle federal complaints that they wrongfully foreclosed on homeowners who should have been allowed to stay in their homes.

The banks, which include JPMorgan Chase, Bank of America and Wells Fargo, will pay billions to homeowners to end a review process of foreclosure files that was required under a 2011 enforcement action. The review was ordered because banks mishandled people’s paperwork and skipped required steps in the foreclosure process.

Under the settlement, people wrongfully foreclosed on could receive from $1,000 up to $125,000.

The agreement covers up to 3.8 million people who were in foreclosure in 2009 and 2010. Of those, about 400,000 may be entitled to payments, advocates estimate.

Apple: 40 billion apps downloaded

CUPERTINO, Calif. — Apple says people have downloaded more than 40 billion apps on for the iPhone, iPad and the iPod Touch, nearly half of them in 2012.

Apple Inc. said Monday that December saw record downloads of more than 2 billion apps. There are 775,000 individual applications available in the app store. Apple says it has paid app developers more than $7 billion.

The 40 billion milestone does not include updates or re-downloads.

iPhone owner tricks thief with dating app

NEW YORK — A New York City musician used a combination of technology, seduction, a hammer and a bribe to reclaim his missing iPhone from a confused crook.

Jazz trombonist Nadav Nirenberg says he left the phone in a livery cab on New Year’s Eve. The next morning, the 27-year-old learned via email that someone was sending messages to women using a dating app on the phone.

Nirenberg logged on to the service and offered the man a date — posing as a woman. He even posted a picture of a pretty girl.

When the culprit arrived at Nirenberg’s Brooklyn apartment building with wine, the musician greeted him with a $20 bill while holding a hammer — just in case.

The thief handed him the iPhone and left without a word.

HBO, Universal sign broadcast deal

NEW YORK — HBO has renewed its deal with Universal Pictures to be the exclusive pay-TV provider of the studio’s movies for another decade, the companies said on Sunday. Terms of the agreement were not disclosed.

HBO, part of Time Warner Inc., and Universal Pictures, part of Comcast Corp., have had an agreement in place since 2003.

The deal includes movies produced by Universal and its specialty films unit, Focus Features.

Health care spending slows

WASHINGTON — Americans kept health care spending in check for three years in a row, the government reported Monday, an unusual respite that could linger if the economy stays soft or fade if job growth comes roaring back.

The nation’s health care tab stood at $2.7 trillion in 2011, the latest year available, said nonpartisan number crunchers with the Department of Health and Human Services. That’s 17.9 percent of the economy, which averages out to $8,680 for every man, woman and child, far more than any other economically advanced country spends.

Still, it was the third straight year of historically low increases in the U.S.

Advice

Consult lawyer over custody laws when making will

Dear Amy: My wife and I deadlocked over a critical issue. We have, after years of procrastinating, tried to put our estate in order. With two minor children, we must choose people who would become their guardians if my wife and I both died.

We might as well be the Red Sox and the Yankees. She wants her brother and sister-in-law, who live out of state, to be our choice. While I have issues with their parenting “style,” I think it is very important that, in this unlikely scenario, we try and maintain as much stability, e.g. same school, same friends, same surroundings, remaining near my parents (their grandparents), etc.

I have chosen my best friend, “Justin,” and his wife. I have no siblings. I have known him since

I was 2 years old, and he has consistently proved himself to be as close to “blood” as any true blood relative (and better than some). He is my family.

He and his wife live two miles from where we live and would give our three children stability at a challenging time. We have sought the help of a psychologist, but she has been unable to help us see the other side to the point of changing our “vote.”

What do you suggest?

— Not Dead Yet Dad

Dear Dad: You and your wife should consult an attorney to determine the custody laws in your state.

Recognizing that the odds of this happening are minuscule, if you both died it would be best for the children to have as stable a life as possible, with few transitions, such as moving — and to be raised by people who share your basic values and parenting philosophy.

You also need to factor in the abilities (including financial) and willingness of your respective choices. If you ask each couple if they would be willing to do this, their response might help you and your wife make a joint decision.

My understanding is that if you both died without naming a guardian, the court would decide, based on what it determines is in the best interest of the children. For now, if you and your wife cannot decide on one guardian, you could each write a letter enclosed with your will promoting your own choice, which a judge would be able to use as testimonials to render a decision. Run this idea past your lawyer.

Horoscope

TODAY’S BIRTHDAY (Jan. 8). Your cosmic birthday gift is a new level of personal freedom. Breezy energy comes into your professional life, and suddenly the one who held you back gets out of your way in February. Your social life rocks in March. Singles love the relationship options. September travel unites family in common fun. Cancer and Virgo people adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 20, 4, 44, 49 and 30.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). If you can't gain insight into another person's nature, try to gain insight into your own. By doing this, you'll align yourself with the forces of greater understanding.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). The bull doesn't always rage. So powerful a creature needn't prove how powerful he or she is at every juncture. And just now, you're about as peaceful, docile and content as a cow in the meadow.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). There's much to process in social dynamics right now, and you are game. You know how you want this chapter of your life story to end, but you just may get a cliffhanger instead. Certainty is overrated anyhow!

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Even though there are challenges in your financial sector, they can all be worked out. This feels like the most of your worries, and it's really the least. Relax and let heaven reflect your inner beauty back to you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Within you is the power to strike a fire in someone's heart. You may even sense that you could do this in the heart of everyone you meet if you were so inclined. And you wouldn't be out of line, either.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). It may seem that you're helpless to make a difference, but it's not true. The world is big, but you can always do something to make it better. By resolving conflicts within yourself you'll bring harmony to your environment.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). It's a bit like when you're watching your favorite drama and you come to an episode in which surprisingly little happens. Don't lose interest, though. There are more exciting days around the bend.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Humans have been on Earth for hundreds of thousands of years, and yet articles on basic topics like how to stretch and eat are still popular. Trust your human instinct, not the latest trend.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). According to Greek legend, fire was intended for the gods only. But then Prometheus stole a flame or two and gave it to the humans. He was punished for this act of kindness, and maybe right now you can relate.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Don't let your quest for knowledge consume you. There is no reason to make a grab for the distant bits. Let things come to you. Everyone knows what happens to people who overreach: They lose their balance.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). True to your sign, you'll share what's in your vessel and still have more left over for you. But instead of water, or perhaps in addition to it, you have insight, wisdom and health to give.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). You don't need a complicated mind map to find out what you really want to do. It's obvious. The only thing stopping you from going forward is fear, and that will slowly disappear as you take more steps toward your desire.

We can always trust God’s goodness

Dear Dr. Graham: Is God in control of everything that happens — even evil things? If He is, doesn't that make Him evil also? And if He isn't in control, doesn't that make Him weak and less than God? I've always been puzzled about this.

The Bible tells us two important truths, however, that I urge you to keep in mind. First, it tells us that God is all-powerful. From the farthest galaxy to the smallest sub-atomic particle, God created absolutely everything in the universe — including you and me.

He also created the laws by which the universe is governed, and the Lord Jesus Christ continues to watch over it from heaven. The Bible says that “He is before all things, and in him all things hold together” (Colossians 1:17).

But the Bible also tells us another important truth: Evil is real, and this world is often attacked by spiritual forces that are not from God but from Satan. Their authority is limited and temporary, but it is nevertheless real, and we see it on every hand.

Can we completely understand these two truths? Some day we will, but not yet. In the meantime, however, we can trust God's goodness and put our lives into His hands, no matter what is happening around us.

God loves us, and we know this is true because Jesus Christ died and rose again for our salvation. Is your faith and hope in Him?

Carefully monitor cuts, blisters on diabetic foot

Dear Dr. Roach: Are Epsom salts good or bad for blistered or cut feet in a diabetic?

— F.S.

Dear F.S.: This isn't an easy question to answer. I found conflicting advice and no clear evidence to support either side, so let me tell you what I think: First off, cuts and blisters on the foot of a diabetic need careful monitoring; infection can set in quickly due to the difficulties with wound healing that come with diabetes. Getting your health professional (diabetes specialist, regular doctor, podiatrist) involved early is a good idea.

Epsom salts (magnesium sulfate) can make soaks especially drying to the skin, which can in turn cause skin cracks that allow bacteria in, especially if your feet are generally dry. If you are going to soak, it makes sense to carefully dry your feet and then put on moisturizer afterward.

Because diabetes can affect the nerves, especially the ability to feel hot and cold, make sure the soak is not too hot. It's critical to avoid burns.

As far as open wounds, like a cut, soaking probably isn't a good idea. For blisters without opening of the skin, a soak may help a bit. But the main point is to keep looking at any foot problem, and let your provider know about any redness or drainage.

Dear Dr. Roach: My husband was diagnosed with Parkinson's disease about a year ago. He walks 5 miles, seven days a week. Is there any other activity that he could benefit from? Also, are there any supplements that could be beneficial for him?

— B.H.

Dear B.H.: Parkinson's disease is a degenerative disease of the brain. The cells in a part of the mid-brain die, causing the progressive inability to control motor function. This is the primary manifestation, for most people. Although there are effective treatments for many of the symptoms of Parkinson's disease, there isn't yet a cure.

Your husband's walking is a great idea, as long as he is comfortable and feels safe doing so. Other beneficial activities include breathing exercises and vocal exercises. A physical therapist is the expert in this area, and occupational therapists can be helpful as well.

Finally, a neurologist, especially someone with expertise in movement disorders, is an invaluable partner; find one sooner rather than later. It takes experience to know when to start treatment.

As far as supplements go, there was a lot of excitement about coenzyme Q10 a few years ago, but a well-done study showed no improvement in symptoms or progression of the disease.

Use button bags to hold jewelry pieces

Dear Heloise: Those plastic zip-closure bags containing extra buttons that come attached to new clothes are great to use for jewelry. I place a jewelry piece in a bag with a small note identifying the special meaning of the jewelry — e.g., heirloom from Mom, etc. — so my children will know the special meaning of the jewelry pieces.

get tangled together and damaged. Keeping things separated also makes them easier to access and wear more often.

The Jewelry Information Center recommends storing jewelry in a jewelry box that is fabric-lined, where it can stay dry and clean. If not, the JIC recommends wrapping each piece in tissue paper before placing it in your desired storage.

If you have a few key pieces that you wear every day, place them in a small tray on top of your dresser or in your bathroom.

Wear your jewelry! Don't save it for a special occasion; make every day a special day!

A quote from my mother that still rings true: If you don't wear and enjoy your jewelry, the next wife will!

Lastly, if you have irreplaceable or very expensive pieces, they should be stored in a safe (but you still should wear them!). Hope this helps.

UK hosts organic corn production workshop

Special to The Gleaner

LEXINGTON – With the price of corn around $7 per bushel, it may be surprising that there could be a more profitable alternative. But, with the price of certified organic corn in mid-December averaging $14.30 per bushel, producing certified organic corn deserves a good look.

“Many farmers are not aware of the significant price premium for organically produced corn,” Lee Meyer, agricultural economist for the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture, said. “Prices typically are 1.5 to 2 times the price of conventionally produced corn. Farmers who do know about the premium often are not knowledgeable about organic corn markets, production systems and certification rules.”

To help provide grain farmers with the science-based information they need to decide if the organic corn enterprise is a good alternative for them, the University of Kentucky Cooperative Extension Service, in cooperation with Kentucky Corn Growers Association and Organic Valley Cooperative, is conducting a daylong workshop beginning at 9 a.m. Wednesday, Jan. 16, in Bowling Green.

The workshop will take place at the Warren County Cooperative Extension office, 3132 Nashville Road (U.S. 31-W).

Meyer said the workshop is part of an effort to help Kentucky farmers assess opportunities for organic crop production. Researchers in neighboring states found that, after a transition, organic corn yields are very close to yields of conventionally produced corn and may even be better in drought years.

“They also found that the market is growing, being driven by the expansion of feed markets supplying organic dairy, egg and meat production,” Meyer added.

Production challenges include the need for crop rotations, nutrient management, weed control and the certification process.

“Organic cropping systems typically use five- to seven-year rotations instead of the two- to three-year rotations more common in regular cropping,” Meyer said. “Weed control can be a concern, since organic rules do not allow the herbicides common in conventional systems. The rotations help reduce weed pressure, and cultivation is the alternative to spraying.”

The Jan. 16 workshop includes presentations from experienced farmers and educational sessions on organic certification, fertility management, weed management, marketing, economics and profitability.

There is a $10 registration fee to cover the cost of materials and lunch. Farmers can register by email to Will Martin at William.martin24@uky.edu or by contacting their local Cooperative Extension office.

Kentucky extension specialists received a grant from the U.S. Department of Agriculture Sustainable Agriculture Research and Education program to provide educational support for farmers. Grant funds are supporting research, on-farm demonstrations in Kentucky and the workshop.

Because there is so little certified organic corn currently being grown in Kentucky, Meyer believes these demonstration farms will serve an important role.

“They will help extension specialists develop a set of best practices and will provide an opportunity for Kentucky farmers to learn about this new opportunity from their neighbors,” he said.

400 down, helping others

■ Man who once tipped scales at 680 now is an inspiration

By Crystal Wylie
The Richmond Register

RICHMOND, Ky. — When Neil “Bruiser” Burns, 45, posted “400lbs LOST!” on his Facebook page Dec. 8, more than 500 people “liked” his status. The post received numerous congratulations from friends and family, many of whom have been following his story from the beginning.

Dec. 19, he received a call from one of the producers of “The Dr. Oz Show” (on ABC), who told him they wanted to feature his “miracle weight-loss story” as a segment on one of the shows.

Burns sent in pictures and information about his fitness plan, including the parts about cleansing and eating nuts, which were ideas Burns got from watching Dr. Oz.

He is waiting on word about when the episode will air.

In May 2010, Burns was a 6-foot-4-inch, 680-pound backhoe operator who made a decision that would change his life and impact many others in the years to follow.

By December 2012, that former Madison Central High School football player who could barely walk to the bathroom and back is now helping others make their own miracle weight-loss stories.

For around six weeks, Burns has been working as a personal trainer at First Step Fitness in Richmond. Ranging from ages 9 to 56, Burns trains 11 individuals who have each been lovingly given a nickname.

“Woo,” “Taz,” “Crusher,” “Sim Bot,” “Li’l D,” and “Chocolate Thunder,” they like to call each other.

Then there is little “Bam

Bam,” a 230-pound 9-year-old who has been training with Burns for almost two weeks.

The boy’s teacher had contacted Burns, who quickly discovered Bam Bam “does the best Popeye and Yogi Bear impersonations,” he said.

After the boy’s first training, he couldn’t stop talking about it at school the next day, his teacher reported.

Another incredible weight loss story is unfolding right here in Richmond with Theresa “Taz” Anderson, a 48-year-old who has been mostly confined to her wheelchair for the past three years.

On Dec. 17, Burns uploaded a video of Anderson walking 10 feet across the gym without the two canes she had been using.

When she sat down after crossing the room the first time, a smile spread across her face and she gave Burns the double thumbs-up.

After around the fourth trip they all just hugged and cried, said Maureen Graham, Burns’ girlfriend.

The first time Anderson came to the gym, Graham said, they had to push her wheelchair in because she could not do it herself.

Anderson had contacted Burns about a year ago, shortly after the first Register story published. She avoided him time and again until one day “something just clicked, and I wanted to go ahead and start doing something,” she said.

At her heaviest, Anderson weighed almost 400 pounds. She suffers from multiple weight-related conditions and takes four types of medication.

In four weeks, she has lost 45 pounds and 17 inches, she said, and has not drunk a soda in two months. The doctor reported her blood pressure is falling in line, and Anderson hopes to one day kick all the medication.

Losing weight had always been a New Year’s resolution for Anderson, but she never stuck to it, she said. “But now when people ask me about my New Year’s resolution, I tell them ‘I’m already on it.’”

Burns has been her “crutch to lean on,” she said. “I’m climbing that mountain right now; I want to get to the top. When I’m with Neil, I know I’m going to have a good workout. He gives you that lift.”

Rick “Woo” Brewer, 44, powered through extra reps recently during the Register interview and photo shoot, but he’s used to working out in “beast mode” by now.

“Beast mode” is a state-of-mind — an encouragement Burns shouted nearby while Brewer squeezed out one last shoulder shrug.

“Rick’s a powerhouse. He’s going to be way stronger than me; it kind of makes me jealous,” said Burns, joking about his childhood friend and former football teammate.

As Burns’ first client, Brewer is 39 pounds lighter than his starting weight of 385.2 pounds a few weeks ago.

“He had been in contact with Burns throughout his weight loss journey, but continued to eat junk food and feel worse physically. One day, he saw Burns working out.

“I don’t even think he saw me — but I made up my mind that I have to do something,” Brewer said. “I figured Neil would know where I was coming from.”

After his first workout session with Burns, Brewer could barely move his arms, he said. “But you know, it felt good. Instead of feeling down, I started feeling happy about what I was doing.”

One thing that separates his friend from other trainers, he said, is that “he truly cares about every single thing about you. He cares about you physically, emotionally — he wants to see results in you.”

The Register first reported on Burns’ weight loss in November 2011 when he lost a staggering 331 pounds in 18 months the “old-fashioned way.” No pills. No surgery.

A follow-up story came in June 2012 when Burns

TOP: Neil Burns, right, spots Rick “Woo” Brewer at First Step Fitness in Richmond, Ky. In May 2010, Burns was a 6-foot-4-inch, 680-pound backhoe operator. He lost 400 pounds in a 31-month period, and now helps others make their own miracle weight-loss stories.

was just 30 pounds short of his 400-pound weight-loss goal. By that time, Burns had already made appearances on both local and national television (“Good Morning America”). As a living testament, he spoke about healthy lifestyles to children and adults from Florida to Ohio.

Burns still insists on a “cheat day,” when he gets to eat what he wants.

His method has drawn criticism from those who think “cheat days” are counterproductive. But, Burns is in a position to throw up his hands and say: “Look at me now, down 400 pounds later.”

Quincy, Ill., China painters revive dying art that began in the 1800s

By Maggie Menderski
The Quincy Herald-Whig

QUINCY, Ill. — Oletha Briggs had pieces in her kiln when she died at age 102 in 2010.

The avid china painter had taken the kiln with her when she moved to the Good Samaritan Home. Like most china painters, Briggs enjoyed the detailed brush strokes, the time she invested in each piece and the hand-painted finished products.

Also like many china painters, she aged and died.

China painting thrived in society in the late 1800s and early 1900s. Ladies gathered in groups and painted portraits, flowers and landscapes on mugs, plates and tiles. The trend slowed during the World War II as women filled Red Cross stations and supplies from Europe became difficult to obtain. When soldiers returned home, china painters returned to their art.

Doris Sanders of the Quincy China Painters learned the hobby from her elder cousin. But now that her cousin has passed, Sanders, 62, fears the art might eventually die, too.

“The number of painters that started in the ‘50s and ‘60s are dying off,” Sanders said.

For years, Sanders was the young painter in the small group, which meets on the third Tuesday of each month. Sanders paints with fellow members Ethel Vandiver, 89, Ruth Milam, 69, and Sharon Geise, 69.

The club hopes to coach a new generation of painters. Club President Michele Briggs, 42, is the youngest of the dozen club members. Her artwork strikes a youthful tone with an age-old art. The vibrant colors, trendy designs, and use of gold and luster paints stick out in the club’s collection.

Briggs said she wilts at painting flowers but embraces other natural elements. She opted for jungle prints and vines on a recent mug. On another, she used dynamic portions of gold to highlight flowers already on the china.

“Everything that I do is an experiment,” Briggs said.

Even when the painters use patterns, the results vary. During a club meeting, two women sat side by side, each working with the same design. The barn scene featured a windmill and grass. One woman free-painted trees into the scene, but the other kept slightly more true to the pattern.

“You’ve got eight ladies here on a regular basis,” Briggs said. “But if you give them all the same pattern, they’ll all interpret differently, and they’re all stunning.”

And true. A third mug with the finished design showed a black barn’s outline draped in a striking sunset. Sanders explained that the art invokes an appreciation for nature for each painter.

“You can see how the snow falls, and you can see how the branches lay,” Sanders said. “You see shadows.”

While club members have passed the technique on to their children and grandchildren, the club still seeks new members. Belonging to the Quincy China Painters allows the members access to worldwide expertise and techniques. The women hope to offer evening painting classes to accommodate younger artists who might still have full-time jobs. The current club members, with the exception of Briggs, are all retired.

The club eagerly shared the craft and resources with Briggs as she slowly embraced the hobby. Sanders said most can try it with minimal investment. Even though Sanders paint collection varies just as much as the art she produces, she explained exquisite work requires just a few colors. Still, her pallet sports an array of unique colors that she eagerly shares among the club.

“I have enough paint until I die,” Sanders said.

As Briggs stroked her brush over a piece of china, she mused about the pleasure in giving a hand-painted fine gift. She said many don’t realize the time and creativity invested in the array of items these women adorn. Some have painted portraits on china. Others paint boxes, jewelry and dinnerware. Sanders said if it can be thought of, it could be painted.

“There’s a certain satisfaction that comes with creating an heirloom,” Briggs said.

With a short laugh, Milam agreed. As she held a new piece in her hand, a pair of china painted earrings hung near her neck. While sometimes sold, these hand-painted gifts are often given to loved ones.

“And, that doesn’t come from China,” Milam said.

Kentucky Arts Council offers apprenticeship grants

Special to The Gleaner

FRANKFORT – The Kentucky Arts Council is accepting applications until Feb. 15 for the Folk and Traditional Arts Apprenticeship Grant.

The grant provides up to $3,000 for master folk artists to teach the skills, practices and culture of Kentucky's living traditional arts to less experienced artists who are part of the same community.

Master artists and apprentices must apply together and both be residents of Kentucky. A master artist can practice any traditional art form (music, dance, craft, ceremonial art, etc.) learned in his or her community.

"The Folk and Traditional Arts Apprenticeship Grant supports master and apprentice folk artists working and studying together and gives apprentices opportunities to advance toward mastery of a folk art form," said Lori Meadows, arts council executive director. "The program gives recognition to Kentucky's many cultural traditions and aids in the conservation of the state's folk arts."

Master artists and tradition-bearers are exemplary representatives of a folk group's art forms. Their "master" status is determined by other members of the group. The master artist must excel in the art form and demonstrate an effective teaching plan. The apprentice must possess skill in the art form and the potential to share, teach and continue the art form.

The Feb. 15 deadline is for apprenticeships that will occur between July 1 and June 30, 2014.

For more information about the grant, contact Mark Brown, Folk and Traditional Arts Program director, at mark.brown@ky.gov or 502-564-3757, ext. 495.

For more information about the grant or to view the guidelines, visit the program website at <http://artscouncil.ky.gov/Grants/FAA.htm>.

Today in history

Today is Tuesday, Jan. 8, the eighth day of 2013. There are 357 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Jan. 8, 1663, Leonardo da Vinci's "Mona Lisa," on loan to the United States from the Louvre Museum in Paris, went on display at the National Gallery of Art in Washington, D.C., with President John F. Kennedy and his wife, Jacqueline, in attendance.

On this date:

In 1935, rock-and-roll legend Elvis Presley was born in Tupelo, Miss.

In 1959, Charles de Gaulle was inaugurated as president of France's Fifth Republic.

In 1964, President Lyndon B. Johnson declared a "War on Poverty" in his State of the Union address.

In 2011, U.S. Rep. Gabrielle Giffords, D-Ariz., was shot and critically wounded when a gunman opened fire as the congresswoman met with constituents in Tucson; six other people were killed, 12 others also injured. (Jared Lee Loughner has pleaded not guilty to 49 charges in connection with the shooting.)

Ten years ago: A commuter plane crashed after takeoff from Charlotte-Douglas International Airport in North Carolina, killing all 21 people on board. A Turkish Airlines jet crashed in Turkey, killing 75 people (five passengers survived).

Five years ago: Paintings by Pablo Picasso and Brazilian painter Candido Portinari, stolen from Brazil's Sao Paulo Museum in Dec. 2007, were recovered.

One year ago: Bells rang in Tucson, Ariz., as residents paused to remember the six people killed in the shooting rampage a year earlier that left Congresswoman Gabrielle Giffords severely wounded; Giffords led a crowd in the Pledge of Allegiance during an evening vigil. Mitt Romney's Republican presidential rivals piled on the criticism during a morning debate, two days before the New Hampshire primary.

THINK ABOUT IT

"No written law has ever been more binding than unwritten custom supported by popular opinion."

BEST BETS

7 p.m. on 44
NCIS

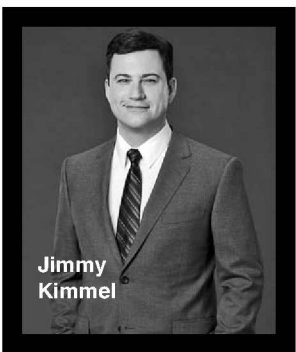

Ziva (Cote de Pablo) is distracted from the team's current case — the deaths of a journalist and a petty officer — by a surprise visit from her father, Eli (Michael Nouri). She's convinced he's come to the U.S. in his official capacity as director of Mossad, but he insists he's only there to share a Shabbat dinner with his daughter. Mark Harmon also stars in the new episode "Shabbat Shalom."

8 p.m. on 44
NCIS: Los Angeles

The team investigates when a woman from Deeks' (Eric Christian Olsen) past becomes the target of an international car-shipping ring with terrorist ties. Kensi (Daniela Ruah) goes under cover in a auto body shop to obtain some inside information in the new episode "Drive." Chris O'Donnell and LL Cool J also star.

8 p.m. on 935
The Abolitionists:
American Experience

Airing over three weeks and commemorating the 150th anniversary of the Emancipation Proclamation, this ambitious presentation tells the stories of five people who fought for the end of slavery. Part 1 introduces these key figures — Angelina Grimke, Frederick Douglass, William Lloyd Garrison, Harriet Beecher Stowe and John Brown — and chronicles the movement's early years, from the 1820s through 1838.

8 p.m. on (F)
The Lying Game

There's more duplicity and intrigue in store for Season 2 of the hit drama, as Alec (Adrian Pasdar) manages to unnerve Emma even as he's behind bars for Derek's murder. Rebecca (Charisma Carpenter) and Sutton plot to keep Ted and Kristin (Andy Buckley, Helen Slater) apart, while Mads (Alice Greczyn) meets a mysterious new guy in town. Alexandra Chando plays twins Emma and Sutton in the season premiere, "The Revengers."

8:01 p.m. on 25
Happy Endings

Penny (Casey Wilson) sees the chance for some favorable publicity when a pop star buys a dress from Alex's (Elisha Cuthbert) shop, but her efforts backfire in a big way. Jane and Derrick (Eliza Coupe, Stephen Guarino) take Max (Adam Pally) on a tour of the city's themed gay bars to help him find out where he fits in. Brad and Dave (Damon Wayans Jr., Zachary Knighton) go on a Mr. Fix-It binge in the new episode "Ordinary Extraordinary Love."

8:30 p.m. on (H)
Movie: The Three Stooges

Any actors who tackle playing the comedic trio of Moe, Larry and Curly automatically have the originals' image to work against — and given that, Chris Diamantopoulos, Sean Hayes ("Will & Grace") and Will Sasso ("MADtv") fare pretty well in the Farrelly brothers' ("There's Something About Mary") 2012 homage. The fellows meet in an orphanage, then have many misadventures. Jane Lynch, Jennifer Hudson, Sofia Vergara and Larry David also appear.

9 p.m. on 17
Cougar Town

The hit comedy returns on its new home on TBS. The new season finds Jules and Grayson (Courteney Cox, Josh Hopkins) adjusting to married life as Travis (Dan Byrd) tries his hand at being a "playah." The rest of their happy-drinking gang returns as well in the season premiere, "Blue Sunday."

9 p.m. on (D)
Africa

From the team behind the acclaimed series "Life" comes this seven-part documentary series that looks at the continent of Africa, spotlighting never-before-filmed species, animal behaviors and natural wonders. The production team spent 1,598 days on location in 27 countries to capture such amazing events as what could be the last great rhinoceros gathering on Earth, lizards that hunt for flies on the backs of sleeping lions and more.

9 p.m. on (f)
Justified

Raylan Givens (Timothy Olyphant) is back for a fourth season of bringing justice to Kentucky's Harlan County. This time around, a 30-year-old mystery is at the heart of the drama. Meanwhile, Raylan is trying to prepare for the birth of his child as well as protect his wayward father who is trying to sell his house. Guest stars this season include Patton Oswalt and Ron Eldard.

9 p.m. on (L)
America's Supernanny:
Family Lockdown

Child specialist Deborah Tillman returns for a second season of visiting families with kid troubles to figure out the root of the problems, foster healthier interactions and put everyone on the path to a happy household. In the season premiere, "The Guido Family," she works with a single mom who's turned the job of parenting over to her own folks.

9:30 p.m. on (C)
The Burn With Jeff Ross
"Roastmaster General" Jeff Ross and his friends are back to skewer the week's hottest topics and go out in the Roaster Coaster to take aim at public figures and people who need to be taken down a notch. Called the "meanest man in comedy" by New York magazine, Ross and his cohorts have viewers cracking up and his targets squirming.

10:35 p.m. on 25
Jimmy Kimmel Live

Looking for "Nightline"? Stay tuned. Starting tonight, the news program is switching time slots with Kimmel's talk show, giving Jay Leno and David Letterman some direct competition. Kimmel's show may look a little different, but he's not planning any major changes from the mix of comedy bits and celebrity visits that viewers have come to expect.
